Michael,

Thanks for the information. Fascinating stuff.

Yes, you may use the photo. I would like to provide a copy of the image with a copyright branded - very small type - so as to further protect this from anyone who might try and use it without permission.

I will send it this week.

Best,

Mark Casey

Hello Mr. Casey,

Thank you for your reply. I would like to include your photo of the Acoma cistern (acomacistern-2) in my dissertation. In my dissertation I discuss the importance of the Acoma cistern for understanding how the ancestors of modern pueblo people may have used these features in prehistory. Coronado described this very cistern in 1540, and there is archaeological evidence for these sorts of water features extending back into the AD 900s. I have attached an early historical image (late 19th/early 20th century) of the Acoma cistern. It looks like it might include some of the same buildings as your photo.

May I please have your permission to include your photo in my dissertation? I will acknowledge you in the caption of the figure as the photographer (published with permission from Mark Casey). When my dissertation is complete later this year I will happily send to you a digital copy. I receive no compensation for completing my dissertation, so I cannot provide financial compensation for using your photo.

Again, thank you for taking a great photo, and I appreciate your considerations towards my request.

cheers,

Michael
