A Project Proposal

ISSUE

Immigration is at the heart of a much heated debate as current legislation stands. There is no simple black and white solution, and it is not the intent of the Boxed In Team to endorse one view over another. The goal is to bring attention to and promote discussion about a growing concern within the education system. Through the immigration debate the position of undocumented college students has been uncovered. Texas houses the second largest population of undocumented students in the United States, second only to California.

Erik Burgos and Daniela Balderas, both seniors at Southern Methodist University, desired to explore the topic further. They submitted a research proposal to the SMU Big iDeas Fund to create a ten minute film addressing the educational issue of undocumented college students in the Dallas, Texas area. When they were awarded a planning grant, they were able to expand on their previous work.

Since then, the team has grown significantly. Leticia Tudon, Elena Harding, Nyddia Hannah, and Jacqueline Negrete joined the team. They come from various interdisciplinary academic backgrounds including engineering, journalism, business marketing, risk management, Spanish, and anthropology. The goal of the team has grown as well. The students plan to create a second part of the film to address undocumented students and the economy, border security and politics.

PHASE II OF PROJECT:

Upon the culmination of part I of our film, we received a tremendous attraction from the media and were approached by several groups. One of the requests we received was from the Latino Jewish Alliance who proposed partnering with our team members to host a Public Forum, inviting several panelists, experts in their fields, as well as media contacts to cover the event. We strongly believe that by carrying out Phase II of our project we can further spread awareness and eventually draw closer to the core purpose of our project: To have our short film serve as a catalyst for future conversation on the issue.
