Quotables from S.M.U. Notables

Joel Reifman, "The more witty and urbane among you will agree that this yearbook is INCREDIBLE!"

Brian Blakely, "What is obscenity to one person is but a subject of scientific inquiry to another."

Randy Ray, 1st Lieutenant — U.S. Army, "We each have our own type of JAG waiting for us somewhere beyond graduation."

I know how it feels. I made a 70 once.
Laurie Kratkie.

Mark Burk, "Oh, that men should put an enemy in their mouths to steal away their brains! That we should, with joy, transform ourselves into beasts!"

Shannon Savage, "What can you say about life as a 1L...?"

Making

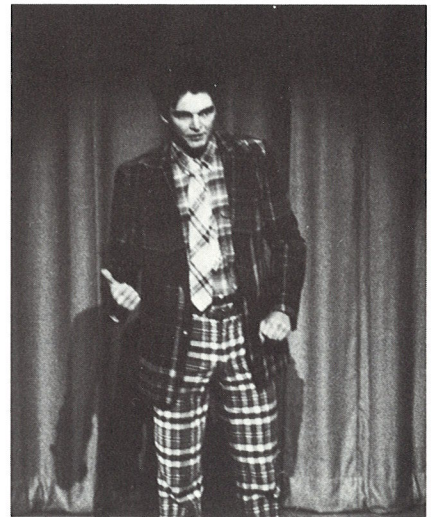

We all know that S.M.U. Law School is above reproach, but there is always room for improvement. A perfect S.M.U. Law would not be like Harvard or Yale, but would have more of that elusive Texas ambiance: sort of like enjoying fried chicken and a roll from Bubba's in the back seat of your B.M.W. while sharing a Perrier and lime with a Sophomore psychology major.

Nevertheless, those of us here at Juris Annum have compiled a list of those things which would make S.M.U. Law School the Highland Park of legal education. In spite of our obvious reverence for the institution in which we have spent many a gleeful hour, most of us will admit — at least in private — that a few subtle alterations would make the House of Salacuse the pride of the Lone Star State. Our plan for perpetual greatness calls for changes in geography and environment, a close examination of the personalities and physical features of our less-fortunate professors (those things a sportcoat can't hide), suggestions for a New Improved curriculum, and ideas which could potentially make the S.M.U.L.S. student body more "well equipped."

Geography and Environment. Turn the library lobby into a Mexican food restaurant; valet parking on the lawn of Dallas Hall, paid out of our student activity fees; move the Law School downtown to the first six floors of Republic Tower — sure, parking would be tough, but at least we wouldn't have to drive to work and interviews; buy the Tango Frogs (with SBA funds) for the top of Lawyers Inn.

Faculty and Staff. Require that all Law School professors subscribe to Gentleman's Quarterly, and hire Jean Jury to make sure they read it; buy Izod smocks for library personnel;

S.M.U. A Great Law School

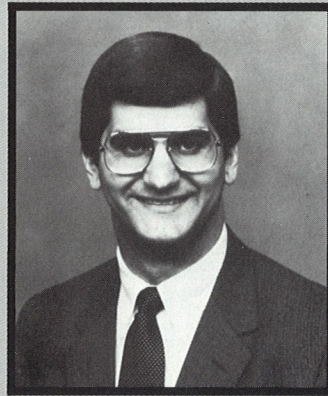

Great Moments In Law School History, Part I

When Jean Jury went from admissions to burlesque in Follies.

Trade Walkowiak and Carl to U.T. for Charles Alan Wright (or Bill Powers and a draft choice); make Ross Perot dean of the law school: If we're all going to wear white shirts, why not buy gray slacks and go all the way? (And besides, these legal writing instructors have it coming); establish a fund to send Professor Norton to Dale Carnegie classes; convince Professor Bridge to donate his ties to Lawyers Inn — it could use tasteful new curtains; hire Don Pardo to warn professors when three minutes remain in class; fund a study of the twisted minds of law professors who write "humorous" final exams; send Professor Steele up in the shuttle to study space law — show NASA what it means to carry a payload; pre-empt Bloom's "Condor Theory"; Buy Professor Booth a second sportcoat; "Honesty is the best poli — —" Hadzi-Antich.

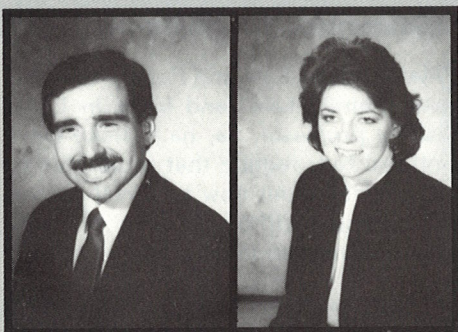

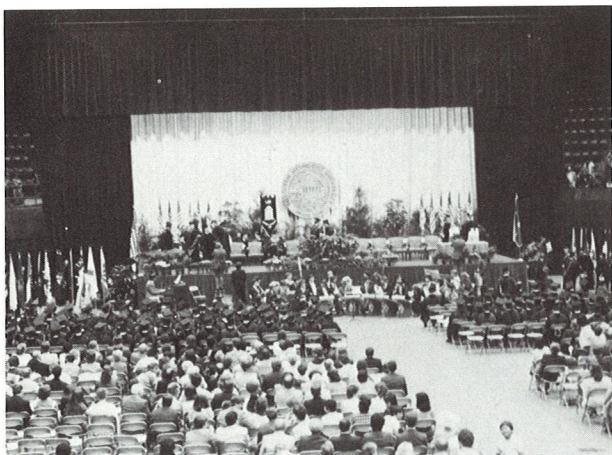

Great Moments In Law School History, Part II

Brad Gahm is elected Student Body President

even with Ritchie Whitten as campaign manager.

Curriculum. Merge Water Law and Family Law and call it Underwater Family Law (and bring in Lloyd Bridges as a visiting professor, ha, ha.); make Dave Rusnak an intentional tort; require that professors instruct first-year students about how to travel up and down Greenville Avenue without getting a traffic ticket or social disease; register in person!

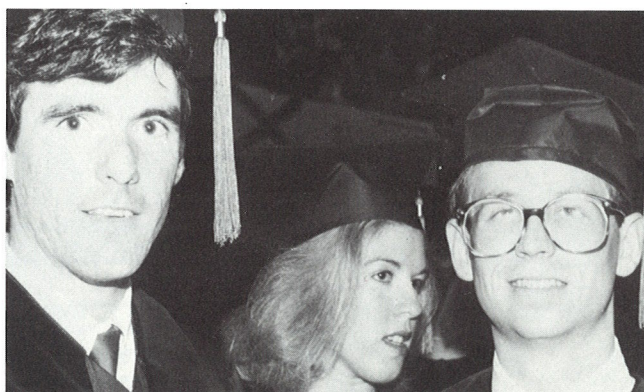

Student Body. Char Hummel, enough said; finance a law school parking garage by selling the discarded fashions of undergraduate females; establish a secret society for everyone who voted for Jim Walker in the S.B.A. election, with monthly meetings in the phone booth at Underwood Law Library; put this sign on the refrigerator in the student lounge — if you are the person who stole the turkey sandwich yesterday, please contact your physician immediately ...; require students to change their cotton shirts at noon.

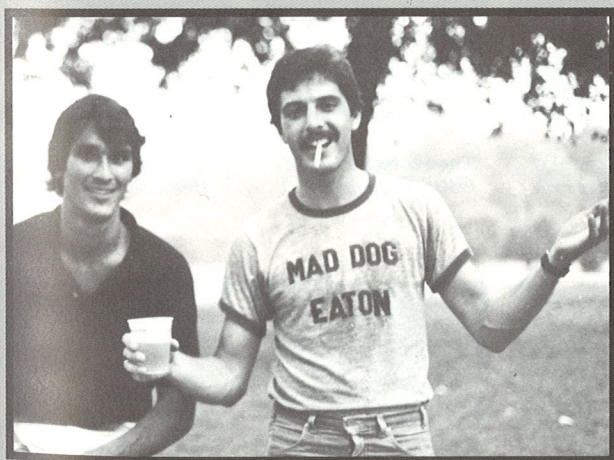

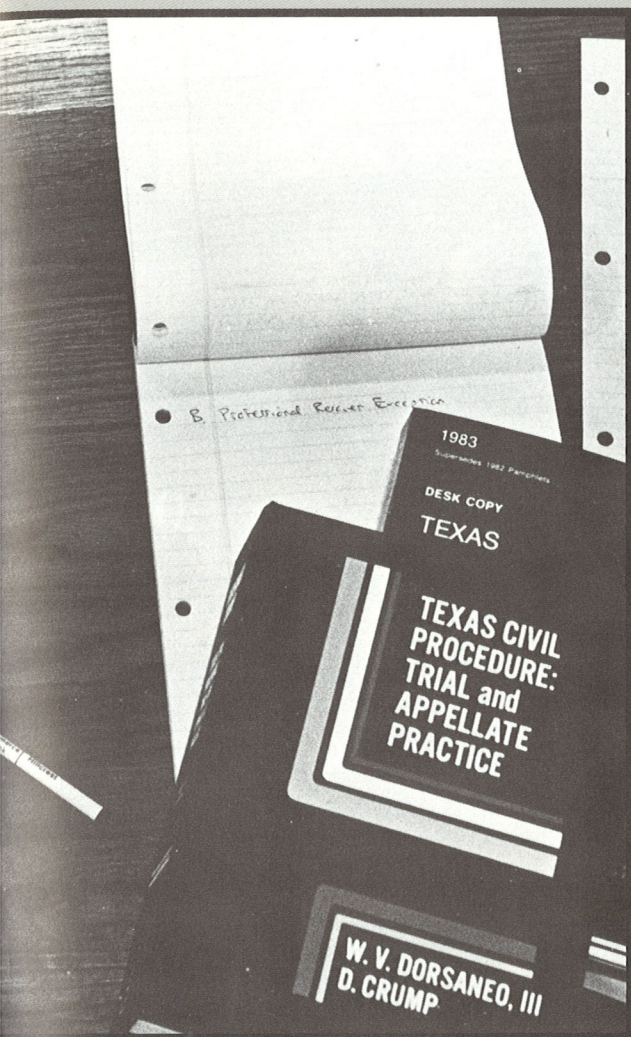

Great Moments in Law School History, Part III

When the candidates for SBA President tied at 189 votes each.

LAWYER

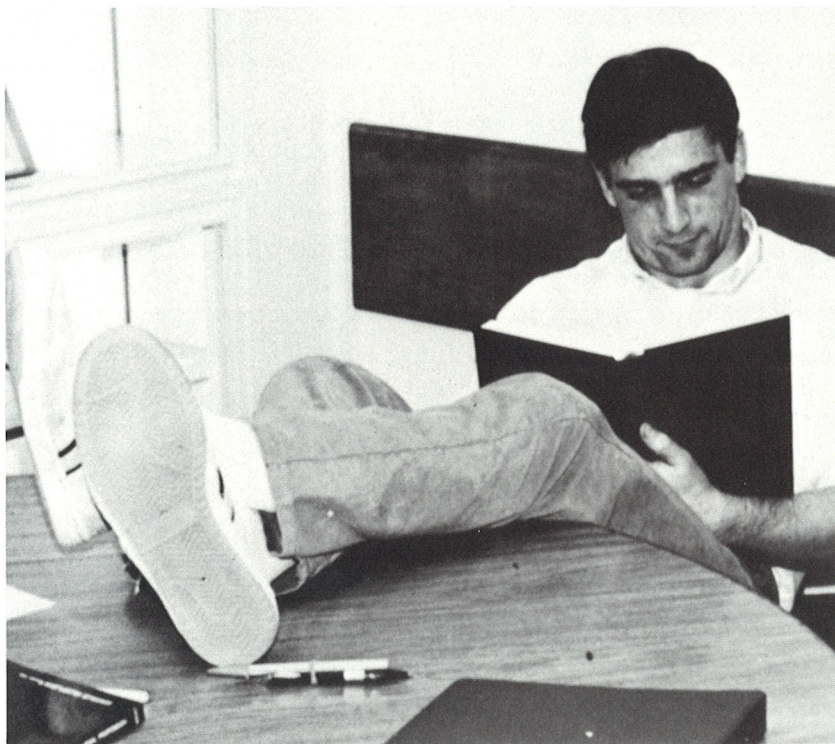

When the jury files in to deliver a verdict after weeks of direct and cross examinations, hot clashes of lawyers and cool decisions of the judge.

There are points of high silence — twiddling of thumbs is at an end — bailiffs near cuspidors take fresh chews of tobacco and wait — and the clock has a chance for its ticking to be heard.

A lawyer for the defense clears his throat and holds himself ready if the word is "Guilty" to enter motion for a new trial, speaking in a soft voice, speaking in a voice slightly colored with bitter wrongs mingled with monumental patience, speaking with mythic Atlas shoulders of many preposterous, unjust circumstances.

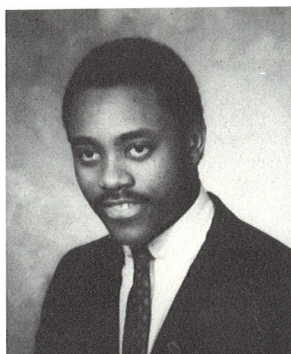

Carl Sandburg

Office of the Dean

Jeswald W. Salacuse, Dean and Professor of Law, A.B., 1960, Hamilton College; J.D., 1963, Harvard University; Diplome d'Etudes Francaises, 1959, University of Paris. Dean Salacuse has had extensive teaching and research experience in Africa and the Middle East, including work the Ford Foundation's Middle East Regional Advisor on Law and Development.

Admissions: Office of the Jean

Jean Kyle Jury, Director of Admissions, first came to SMU in 1966 as a secretary. This position was her first job, over which she "cried buckets of tears learning to type." Before this, she attended the University of Kansas for a year and a half, then married. Mrs. Jury's experience as a "perennial roommother" for her only son and her work for the Republican Party has served her well at SMU. From all of us, thanks!

THE JEAN'S STAFF — L to R: Shelia Gillespie, Mary Hunter-Sigafoos, Ruth Kimler, and Mrs. Jury.

Summer law clerks gain experience; grab 'perks'

Tickets to any show in town, memberships at health clubs, choice seats at the Dallas Symphony, box seats at Rangers games, a furnished apartment, free lunches, happy hours at assorted bars around town and a weekly salary in the $550 to $700 range.

Not interested? What about free plane tickets to visit Dallas from anywhere in the country? Too long to be without your spouse? Well he or she can come, too. The hotel room is free. If that's not enough, there's an office with a brass plate on the door, personalized note pads, a Dictaphone, personal secretaries and a key to the executive washroom. Like horse racing? Giddyap down to Louisiana Downs with a bunch of folks. How about white water canoeing down the Buffalo River in Arkansas? The van leaves in 15 minutes. You want athletics? We've got golf and tennis tournaments, racquetball reservations and recommendations for jogging spots.

Should you take the box or what's behind Curtain No. 3? Oh Monte! Pick me! Pick me!

It's no dream, no game show. All the perks and prizes for this summer job are real.

The beneficiaries: students in the top 20 percent of the country's top law schools. The benefactors: Dallas law firms spending themselves silly to woo these students into their cool offices for the summer.

The one minor catch: Some work is involved. But for the estimated 600 young lawyers on the loose in Dallas this summer, work won't get in the way of fun. And the fun, in the sweetest twist of all, is really part of the work. It's all part of being a "summer associate" or "clerk" in Dallas — no small feat, given the growing popularity of the city as both a summer station and a career incumbency. In less than a decade, Dallas has gone from a legal outpost to one of the top approaching the status of New York and Washington. Not coincidentally, the rise of Dallas' legal community mirrors the city's economic growth and cultural boom. Seven years ago, there were 4,545 lawyers in the Dallas area; today, there are more than 7,500. By 1990, the number is expected to swell to 10,000. Dallas lawyers get downright bubbly about the situation, and, they say, there's no end in sight.

Ann O'Regan thinks it may have been TV reruns of Perry Mason that first got her interested in law. It wasn't so much Mason's battering courtroom histrionics ("But if your were at home on the night of the murder, Mr. Jones, then how could you have known . . .") that led her to move from her native San Francisco to Washington and Georgetown University Law School. A government major as an undergraduate, she first thought she would spend her career with a federal agency. Several part-time jobs within the massive bureaucracy of the U.S. Department of Labor, though, were enough to convince her that her best interests would be met by a law firm. High law board scores, excellent grades and an editor's position with a law school publication made Ms. O'Regan an ideal summer associate in the eyes of law firm recruiters.

Most of her law school friends decided to clerk in New York this summer, pulling down $900-a-week salaries and enjoying the fruits of the Big Apple. No one else in her second-year law class came to Dallas. "When I said I was going to Dallas, they thought it was very unusual," says Ms. O'Regan, 23. "My friends wanted to know why I was going there."

She had her reasons. First, she wanted a city where the legal community was growing. Second, she wanted a "new" city, one unencumbered by "old boy" legal traditions; she narrowed her choices to Dallas, Washington, Seattle and Phoenix. Third, and most important, Last summer, while on a cross-country trip through the United States, she spent several days in Dallas, liked what she saw and thought: "This could be a place I could live."

So when recruiters from the Dallas law firm Gardere & Wynne came courting Georgetown law students last fall, Ms. O'Regan was ready to be wooed. She already knew something about the firm having read The American Lawyer magazine's annual summer associate survey, which ranked Gardere & Wynne's 1983 summer program last overall among eight of the largest Dallas law firms. The survey, based on comments from nine of the 23 clerks at the firm last summer, gave Gardere & Wynne poor marks for social events and a very low rating as a job choice after law school. But the firm got the best scores among the eight Dallas firms for the quality and importance of work assignments and the comportment of its on-campus recruiters and the interviewers at the firm.

"I didn't pay much attention to the magazine because I had seen Dallas, and I had read about the firm," says Ms. O'Regan. "I could probably live in a lot of cities, but I really enjoyed Gardere & Wynne."

The firm flew her down for an interview early this year. Hubert Crouch, a partner and recruiting chairman for the firm, picked her up at D/FW Airport and drove her to Joe Willy's Market & Grill for chicken-fried steak. ("She asked me where the chicken was," Crouch says.) The firm also paid for her hotel, wine and dined her, interviewed her and offered her one of the 22 summer associate positions at the firm. Ms. O'Regan accepted.

The same scenario is played out each year by dozens of Dallas firms, in varying degrees. By the time a summer clerk is hired full time by a large Dallas firm, the process often has taken two years and cost the firm more than $20,000 in travel, entertainment, salary, food, accommodations, lawyers' time and materials. Like a college courting an athlete, a firm tried to present itself and its environs in the best possible light to influence the student's decision.

"It is now almost universal with firms of about 25 lawyers and above to do their recruiting almost exclusively through summer clerkship programs," says Carroll D. Stevens, associate dean of the University of Kentucky Law School and past president of the National Association of Law Placement, a nonprofit New Orleans-based educational group to which all schools and most major law firms belong.

"I think about everybody has looked upon that development with favor. It tends to make the recruiting process a little more humane, a little more of an informed process for everyone involved. It's a great tool for lessening the risk, if you will, for both the student and the firm. It gives them a chance to try one another out before making decisions that do have a fair degree of permanence to them."

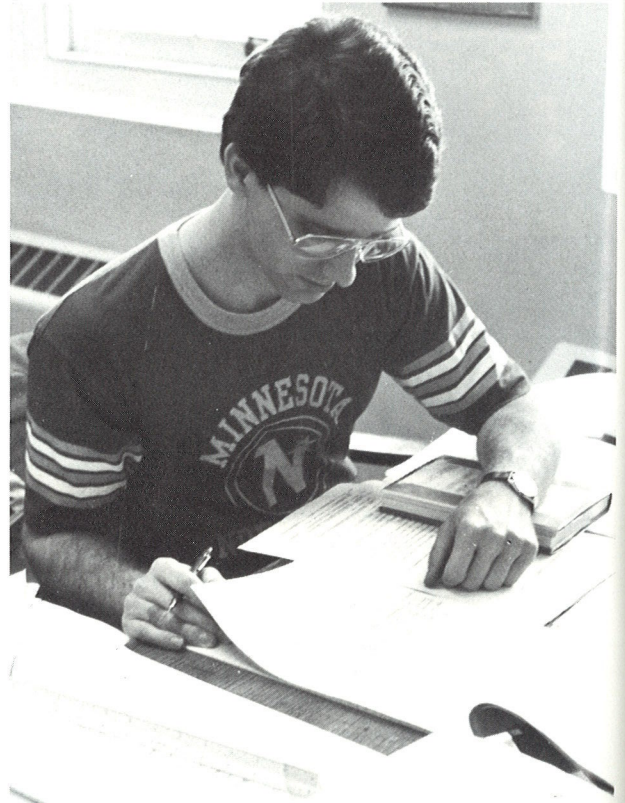

As little as seven years ago, "recruiting budget" was not part of a Dallas law firm's vocabulary. Even today, just 26 Dallas law firms have recruiters, and only seven of those are full-time positions; at the others, recruiting is handled by attorneys in addition to their regular work. Many corporations, accounting firms and municipal, state and federal agencies also hire summer law students, but only a few have a full-time recruiter.

Though the actual figures are closely guarded secrets, it's well known that recruiting budgets at Dallas law firms have increased dramatically in just a few years. Following the poor rating in the The American Lawyer survey, Gardere & Wynne increased its recruiting budget by 30 percent and got more partners involved in recruiting, having them host dinners and take clerks to lunch. In the last three years, the firm has increased its recruiting budget more than 133 percent.

"We don't look at the summer clerkship program as a way for the firm to make money; we expect to lose money on it," says Crouch. "But we think it's such an important investment in the future of the firm that we're willing to pay top dollar and do what it takes to show these people we're a great place to work."

Southwestern Law Journal was the first scholarly publication of S.M.U. Law School. This review, edited by students, reaches legal practitioners and scholars in this country and around the world, and even represents the Law School in the library of the U.S. Supreme Court. With subscribers in all legal fields, the Journal publishes articles on a wide variety of legal topics. A six-issue volume is published annually, with four yearly issues devoted to general legal topics. A special tax issue includes scholarly works focusing on that specialization. The Journal's "Annual Survey of Texas Law" provides an analysis of current developments in twenty different areas of Texas law. Student Board and staff members are selected each year on the basis of outstanding academic achievement and writing ability.

Rewards many in clerking experience

They appear to be a very homogenous group, these summer associates. The males wear gray, blue and tan suits, white or blue oxford-cloth shirts, foulard silk ties and well-polished wing-tips and loafers. The women are dressed in business suits; most with long hair have swirled it into tight buns. During a cocktail party/dinner at the Belo Mansion sponsored by eight Dallas law firms, the clerks mingle in small groups swilling beer and white wine and pecking hesitantly at blocks of cheese. In many ways, it's typical of the kinds of entertainment they will experience this summer, only more blatant in its pitch.

Before dinner are the speeches. Irving L. Goldberg, 78, a judge with the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, calls the clerks "novitiates in the contemporary legal practice" and rambles through vignettes about his career. Robert Gwinn, president of the Dallas Bar Association, hammers home that law firm growth in Dallas "is literally exploding," that clients here seldom default on fees and that the legal community is so close, agreements between lawyers are often reached over the phone and later sealed with a handshake. The meatiest spiel comes from attorney Barbara M. G. Lynn, president of the Dallas Association of Young Lawyers. Among other things, she tells the clerks that:

□ The 1980 census for Dallas/Fort Worth showed a population of 2.9 million; by the year 2000, it will be 5.3 million.

□ In the last four years, Dallas proper has grown by 5 percent and the suburbs by 60-70 percent.

□ In 1982, corporate clients made up a larger percentage of law firm receipts than individual clients.

□ Five of the top 12 Fortune 500 companies are located in Dallas.

□ The median household income in Dallas is a very high $28,900.

"If the future prospects for business are good, then I think the future prospects for law are good," she says. less than three weeks, they've been to more restaurants, bars, cultural events and points of interest than many Dallasites enjoy in a year. While doing these things, they've met the majority of lawyers in the firm. That, and some hands-on exposure to law in the real world, is the essence of the summer clerk program.

"Look. No matter how much you go out, you have to be at work the next morning," Reagan Silber is saying between gulps of Coors at the Belo Mansion. Silber, from San Antonio, is a first-year law student at UT-Austin and a summer clerk at Johnson, Bromberg & Leeds. "The amount of partying is probably exaggerated. There's just not enough time to go out every night, sleep eight hours and go in to work the next morning."

"It's not all fun and games," says Ken Webb, a Stanford law student clerking at Strasburger & Price for six weeks before heading off to a San Francisco firm for six weeks. "We do some work."

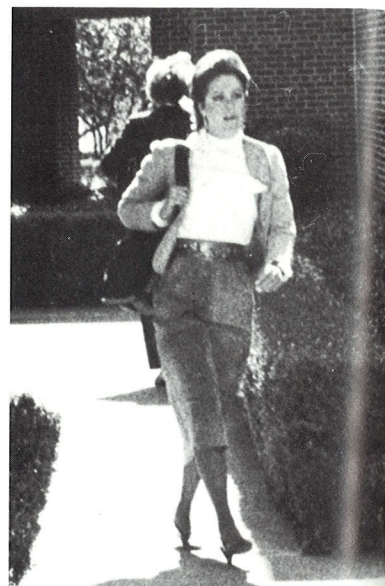

The setting is The Mansion on Turtle Creek and the firm is Jones, Day, Reavis & Pogue. Clerks mingle with attorneys amid trays of potato skins stuffed with sour cream and caviar, mushrooms stuffed with spinach, sesame seed-coated chicken tidbits and a massive piece of beef sliced to order, offered with three kinds of gourmet mustard. No one lines up at open bars, preferring to catch the eye of ubiquitous waiters who offer everything from gin to champagne.

A general rule of thumb is that the larger the firm, the more parties and activities the clerks can expect. The reason is simply that it gives the clerks and lawyers more chances to meet and talk informally. It also lets the clerks see Dallas. But this courting begins months — and sometimes a year — before the clerk comes to Dallas for a summer. In the fall, many of the large Dallas firms host lavish luncheons and cocktail parties at law schools in an effort to pique the interest of first- and second-year students.

"It's very common at this school," says Adrienne Diehr, director of placement at UT-Austin's law school. "Sometimes they have parties for all students, sometimes it's just for people who are interviewing with them and sometimes it's just for a select group. But very often it's for every

Steve Hopson, assistant dean for placement at the University of Virginia Law School, says that a few firms host large cocktail parties for students: "I would have to guess that Texas firms would be in the vanguard of those. It's also one of the few areas where our students don't have to prove some sort of a local connection. The other firms tend to be skeptical: Why are you interested in California, why are you interested in New York? Texas firms say: 'We don't care if you're interested at all. We just want you to come down here so we can show you that it's a really good place to live. If you're not interested now, then we think we'll make you interested.' It's a completely different attitude."

The proof is in the figures.

Among 1983 University of Virginia Law School graduates, 55 went to New York, 41 to both Washington and Virginia and 26 to Texas. Texas also was the fourth most popular summer job scene for second-year law students from UVA.

Next to taking the bar exam, the fall of the second year is the most critical point in a law student's academic life. Aside from classes and other activities, students must decide which firms to interview with on campus and when, and learn the strengths of the firms by perusing employers' resumes. All this for a 20-minute interview with a recruiter who could determine a career.

"A summer student who doesn't receive a full-time offer from a law firm is at least somewhat disadvantaged in his or her job search during the third year," says lawyer/writer Kanter. "If a firm asks what his experience was last summer and the student says he worked for a firm and he's asked whether he received an offer and the answer's no, then the firm is at least going to think about that fact a little bit. It's not fatal, but it doesn't help the student."

Small- to medium-size firms must compete for top students with larger firms. "The competition for the top law students out of the major universities in this country is greater now than it has ever been," says Charles F. Plenge, chairman of the recruiting committee at Johnson, Bromberg & Leeds, a firm with 55 lawyers.

"I think where we lose out, and what statistics probably show, is that bigger firms end up with a higher percentage of the top students that they go after than we do. It's just that we have to go to the same effort that they go to to get a lesser number. We can be more successful going after students on a one-on-one or small group basis."

"Some of the law firms bring in several hundred recruits in a three-month period. It's unbelievable what big business that is."

Kaye Scoggin, Fairmont Hotel

"I think the big cocktail parties syndrome works really well if you're playing the big numbers game. If you're a big firm and you're looking for the big numbers, then you just want to do something that will show an interest to those students."

Johnson, Bromberg & Leeds, for instance, when recruiting students from SMU, begins scouting prospective summer clerks in the spring of their first year at law school. The firm gets former SMU students to identify good prospects, they see who's writing for the Law Review and they contact them. The premise is that by the fall, those students will know the firm is out there and interested.

The out-of-state recruiting wars have reached such a fervor that hotels now compete for the business by offering special rates, continental breakfasts, shuttle service and free membership in the hotel's health club.

"Some of these law firms bring in several hundred recruits in a three-month period," says Kaye Scoggin, corporate sales manager for the Fairmont Hotel. "It's unbelievable what big business that is. In two days, they have to do a selling job on that recruit. We do as much special for them as we possibly can."

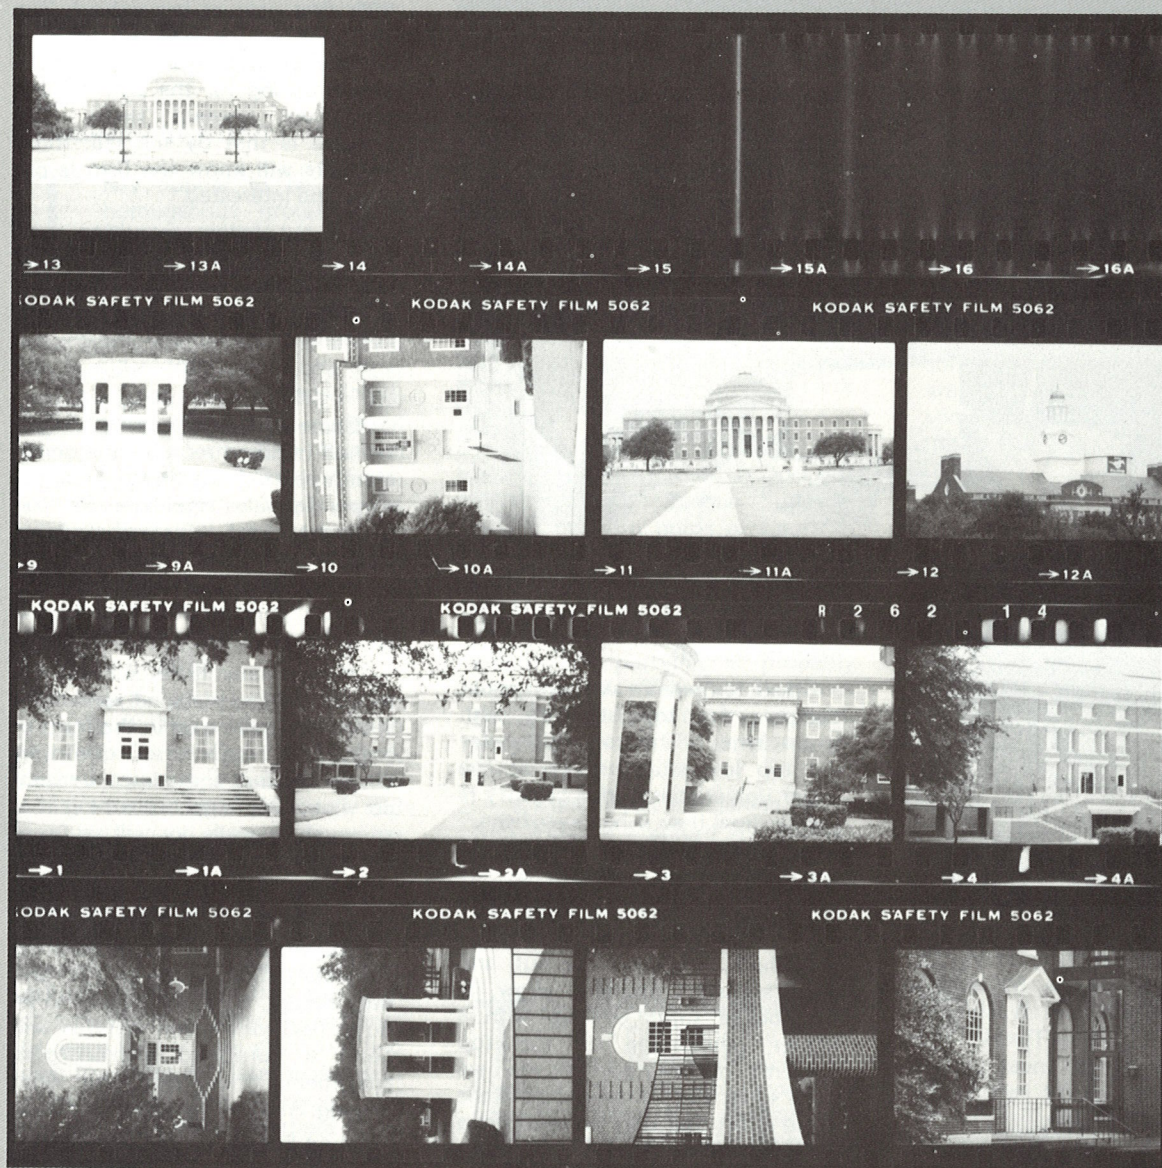

"Many, many times we will put them in suites. We send something special to their room in the form of engraved matches, cookies, chocolates and sometimes we may do wine with fruit. Something that when they walk in will impress them and say, 'This firm really did something outstanding for me that somebody else didn't do.'"

Students may be offered summer clerk slots during this trip. If so, and they accept, they can expect to be flown back down that summer and have a furnished two-bedroom apartment (they pay the rent) waiting. And a hefty salary.

David Schwartz, 24, a UT-Austin student clerking at Thompson & Knight this summer, makes $600 a week. He says he needs the salary to pay his bills and to "buy a working wardrobe." The salary, he says, "is part of the idea of treating you like an attorney."

"I know I'm not worth that," clerk Sharon Shirley says of her $650-a-week salary at Gardere & Wynne. "But that's just what they have to pay for the people they want. You know what's great, though? When you come in on your first day and your name is on the door. That's impressive."

TRUMAN ON TRIAL

The mock trial in progress.

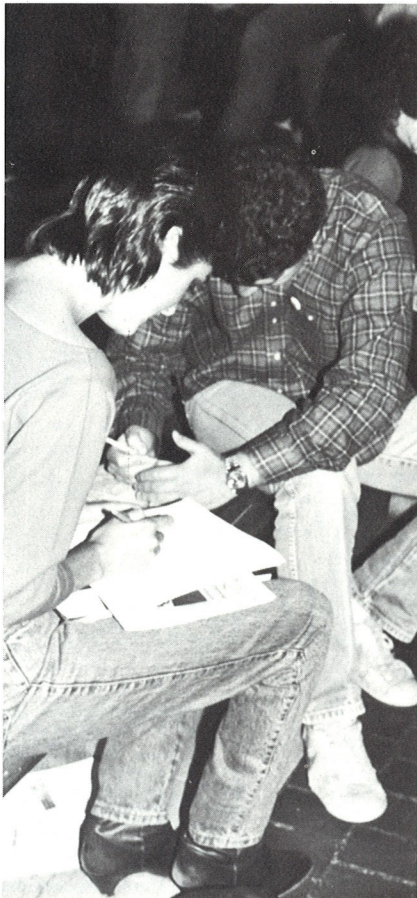

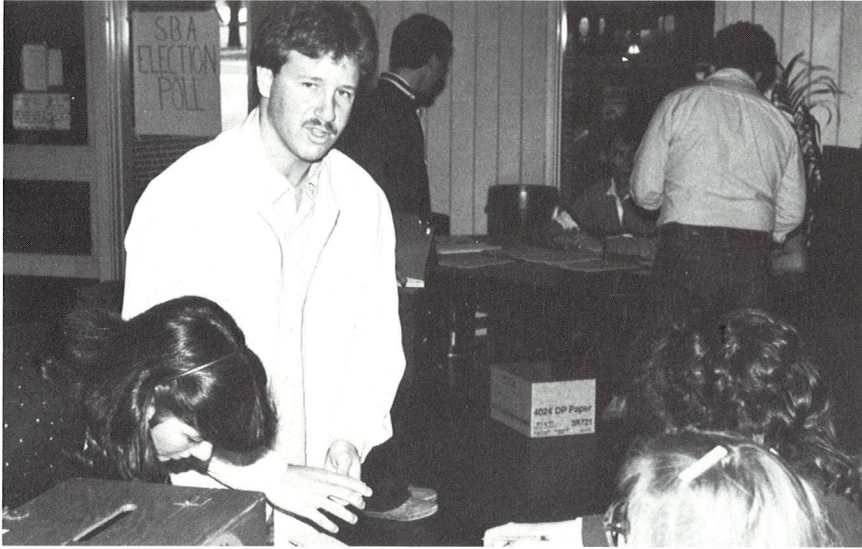

The faculty of the SMU Law School held a mock trial of Harry Truman. The former President was tried for dropping the bomb during WWII. The mock trial was part of SMU registration week, and received news coverage from several local channels. The trial was very well-done; those present came away with a clearer understanding of the issues involved and the ramifications of such a decision.

The law school's annual "Law Week" is not only a time for fun and follies, but also a time for intellectual enrichment. During this special week and throughout the year the law school provides students with an opportunity to absorb a kaleidoscope of views from prominent members of the legal profession. This year's list included Mr. Kaplan, a well-known criminal lawyer/writer, Ms. Laura Nader, Barefoot Saunders, Covey Oliver and a host of others.

This lectureship was established at the SMU School of Law through the generosity of the Hatton W. Sumners Foundation to commemorate the life work of Judge Alfred P. Murrah. Mr. Sumners was the United States Congressman from Dallas from 1913 until 1947, and chaired the House Committee on the Judiciary. Judge Murrah was Judge of the United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit from 1940 until his death in 1975 and was Director of the Federal Judicial Center from 1970 to 1974.

Activities for the 1983-84 year included a Law Day program which was designed to encourage local minority undergraduate students to pursue a career in law. There was also a meeting between members of BLSA and SMU administrators with members of minority business associations in an effort to develop a seminar for minority businessmen, thus strengthening the ties between this university and the Black and Hispanic communities of Dallas. BLSA also conducted a Law School T-shirt sale.

Ebke visits SMU from Germany

By Sam Young

So you think you have it rough at S.M.U. Law School, read about the German system of legal education as well as insight into America and Europe. Professor Ebke explained the German school system as very different than the U.S. He said you attend the Gymnasium (unlike the American translation) until you are eighteen years old and then go directly to law school. The Gymnasium is the equivalent of high school and two years of college. The first stage of law school is at least a four year program and in the last two years you would specialize in a specific area.

Ebke said, "The main difference of law schools in Germany is that they are all state schools (20) and there is no ranking system of the schools. People either stay close to home or pick a school in a city they like. Munich, Hamburg, and Freiburg are favorites."

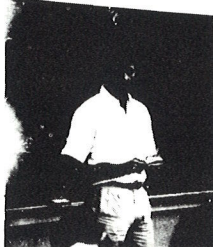

After four years of study (which is like graduation from a U.S. law school) you take your first state exam. Ebke continued, "The function of the exam is to prove you are able to understand the law and apply it to cases. You get a hypothetical case and have six weeks to solve the case, write an opinion and draft a judgement. Students get six written exam problems. There are also oral exams conducted by professors, attorneys and judges." Ebke chuckled, "Passing all of this means you just graduate from law school, but are not a member of the bar."

"To become a member of the bar one must intern for two and one-half years. While a clerk you can go to court but not on the appeals level. You clerk for public prosecutor, administrative agency and an attorney to gain practical experience. The legal education is a seven year process," Ebke said.

The last stage is the second state exam which is similar to the U.S. bar exam. This is an actual case in which you must write a legal opinion and the decision of the court. There is also another oral exam conducted by three or four judges" Ebke explained.

He continued, "Once you pass the second state exam you are an automatic member of the bar. You must pass the second exam to be an attorney. It is a unified bar so you can practice all over the country." Ebke said, "After the second exam about 5% of each class go on for their doctorate. This requires about a 300-400 hundred page dissertation and takes 2-3 years. It is not required but viewed as very prestigious and gives more credibility to a lawyer."

An interesting point to note is that judges are not elected. You actually plan your professional career during your clerkships. He said, "After your second state exam you decide on your career, which you have already prepared for."

Unlike American schools where you usually study at one school, Ebke said, "It is very common to not study at one school. You usually change after two years. At Meunster we encourage students to study in Switzerland. It is a different legal system and language so you get a broad perspective, which is good."

In Germany there are no tuition fees and education is free. You have to pay room and board but it is very easy to get a scholarship. The government encourages average income families to go to school without worrying about costs," Ebke said.

"The fees are set by law and the state tells you what you can charge. This is part of Equal Protection for all, not just to those who can afford it. The party who losses must reimburse the legal fees of the winner. There are no contingency fees and unlike America each party does not bear the own cost," he explained.

Ebke stated, "The law must respond to particular needs of its society. Despite the same economic or democratic standards, the law of different countries responds to different needs."

The first time Ebke was in America was in 1977 when he obtained his L.L.M. at California Berkeley. He then was a consultant for the United Nations for transnational corporations. He also worked for law firm in N.Y.

At first he was surprised in the differences of the countries. he had expectations and knew of many differences between America and Europe but curiously enjoyed discovering the actual differences. Ebke said, "As one knows cliches are not always true. Not everyone from Germany drinks beer and not every American eats hamburgers, lives in San Francisco or works for I.B.M."

Commenting on America and Europe, Ebke said, "Americans are much more concerned with national problems but European students are always exposed to international problems, so they can't confine themselves to just national views. European students are much more politically active. For example, when there is talk of deploying missiles in Europe, it is right in their backyard. Americans are not as directly affected by this event. Europe is so close to Russia the young peoples concerns are much more vocal."

Furthermore, "Through the connection of European states a student in Germany is forced to see how each of the other states thinks and solves legal problems. Europe is not one big country and does not have a common language like the U.S. There is also no unified history, each state has its own distinct history, political system, language and legal system. Even if you understand the language it is very difficult to understand the concepts of another legal system," Ebke said.

Ebke continued, "European students don't take what the government says for granted. They think independently and express their own opinions, because they are exposed to diversity in Europe."

Ebke who teaches Comparative Law offers this advice when observing different legal systems. He said, "No legal system is superior or inferior because it is a lesser developed country. The law must react to different societal needs. Never judge a legal system, a country or a person by your own system. Try to look beyond the people or country and ask Why are they different?"

Ford on campus today

By Richie Whitten

Today marks the second day of former president Gerald Ford's visit to Southern Methodist University. President Ford will hold two seminars today, the first at 10 a.m. on national security in Karcher Auditorium and the second at 3:10 p.m. in Caruth Auditorium on domestic affairs.

On Thursday Ford will lecture on the role of the president in world affairs at 10 a.m. in Fincher Auditorium. This will complete his speaking engagements on campus. An earlier lecture was held Tuesday on "The United States Presidency and Future issues."

All those who signed up to attend the seminars should arrive 20 minutes early with identification as requested by the secret service.

These speeches are only a part of Ford's visit as he also has luncheons scheduled today and Thursday along with visits to various parts of campus.

The law school has played a substantial role in President's Ford's visit. Lawyers Inn has served as the day-time residence for the former president and Student Bar Association president Clyde Seibman will take part in tomorrow's panel discussion on the role of the president in world affairs.

Ford's visit marks the first of two visits by former presidents to our campus this Fall. Jimmy Carter will also visit S.M.U. on November 1st.

The Daily Campus provides all of the SMU Campus with "the news." The D.C., as it is affectionately referred to, never fails to cover the Law School Quad activities. This year's articles included coverage of Brad Gahm's Student Body Presidential campaign, coverage of many of our speakers and events, and most of all coverage for students who wanted to catch a few zzz's (without being caught) in class. One of the Law School favorites in the D.C. this year was the continuing saga of Bloom County's own attorney, Steve Dallas. Many students subscribed to the Summer D.C. — I mean hey — what's a cup of coffee without a side order of a GLSSO article?? know-what-i-mean?!!

The Follies, presented to the public February 25 in McFarlin Auditorium, will open on Broadway . . . Seriously, this year's production was well-polished and funny, funny, funny. Over 40 students sang, danced and joked their way into the hearts and grade books of professors portrayed. Those hot dance numbers with sequined vests, tux pants, sleazy halters and lots of legs held the audience's interest. Especially popular was the "male dancers" who expressed their appreciation of Jean Jury in a number to the tune of "Mame." The singers also bent the audience's ear with great croons to the tune of "New York, New York — Law School, Law School," and "Hooray for Law Review." The skits were definitely well-done and hysterically funny. "Dean Salacuse" (Bill Jack) addressed the audience with such great lines as: "48% of you are female, 40% of you are male, and 12% of you are unknown and need to see Jean Jury immediately." A skit which portrayed Professor Winship and had "Dr. Spock and Scottie" trying to understand "legalese" was also well received. The 1984 Finalists: Petitioners Michael Bass and Gregory Ackels; Respondents Jean Gilliland and Sandy Stephenson.

Justices Kilgarlin, Ray, Guittard, Higginbothan, and Fish presided over the final round in Kar-cher Auditorium.

The 1984 Moot Court Competition was a major success, with over eighty percent of the first-year class participating. The winners this year were Michael Bass and Gregory Ackels. The competition is sponsored by the Dallas firm of Jackson, Walker, Winstead, Cantwell, & Miller. It is judged by prominent Dallas attorneys and judges, which not only provides the participants with much-needed advice and criticism but also contributes to the competition's good reputation.

This year's Moot Court Board and Staff included Tom Bullion, Robert Allen, Clyde Seibman, Martha McKensie, Geoff Graham, Kathy Kinser, Christopher Bolen, Barbara Elias, Mike Zimmerman, Dan Davison, and David Evans. In addition, the moot court classes were conducted by second and third-year students who offered guidance to hopeful and provided headaches for those "just trying to get through."

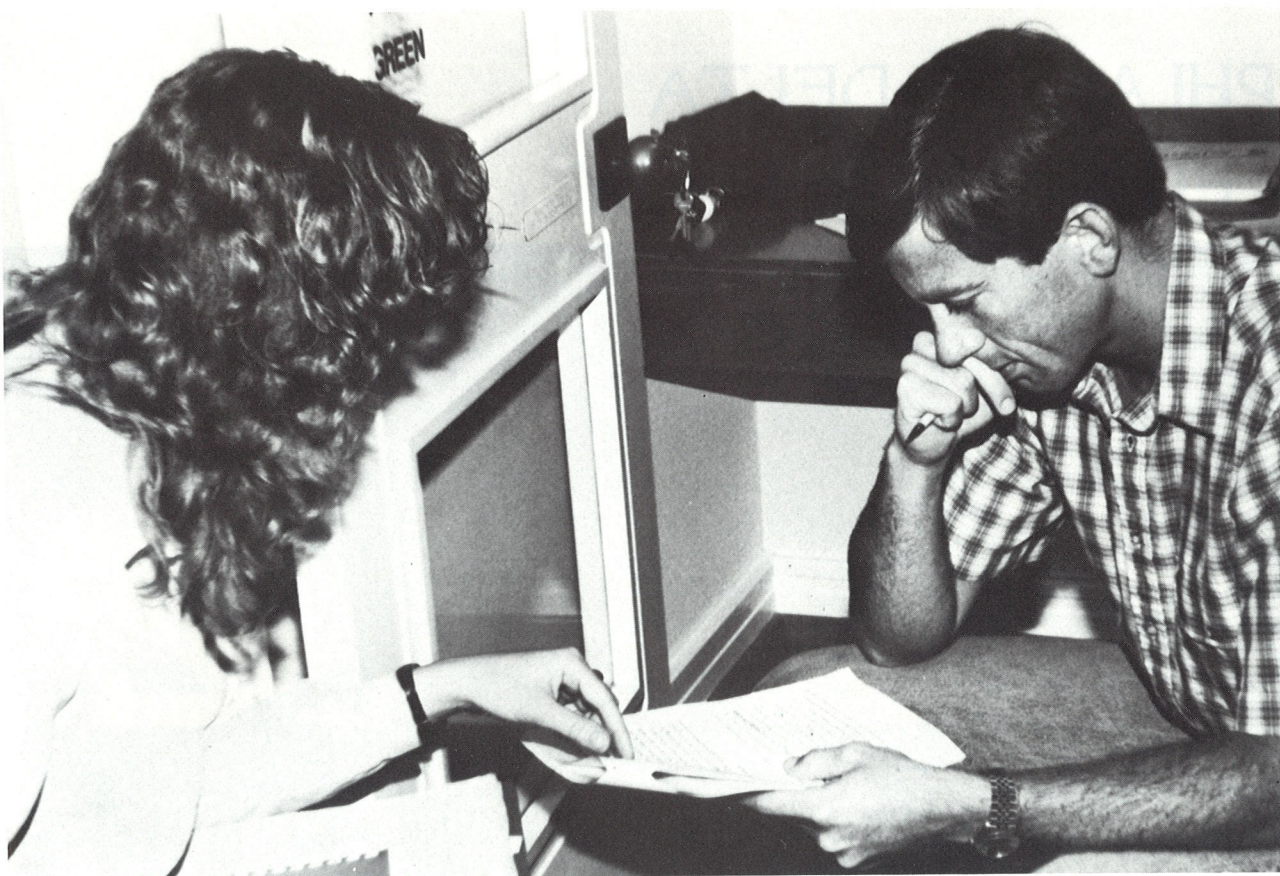

The problem, prepared for competitions at all of the Texas law schools, was a civil suit concerning the division of property upon divorce. Besides providing exposure to appellate advocacy, the case convinced mooters of the hazards of prenuptial agreements and may have even created "sober second thoughts" about pending marital plans.

This group devoted a portion of each week to teaching first-year students how to brief cases, understand legalese, and develop the study habits necessary to succeed in law school. If needed, they are also available to provide advice and help in other areas, and provide the One-Ls with a friendly, familiar face during the traumatic first days of legal study.

PAD is an international professional law fraternity — the world's largest, in fact — with 160 chapters chartered at accredited law schools throughout the United States, Puerto Rico, Canada and Mexico.

We are a professional service organization whose purpose is to serve the law student, the law school and the legal profession.

Our aims include bringing law students together with practicing attorneys, thus providing students with practical information and legal skills generally untouched in the academic curriculum, as well as providing valuable attorney contacts and job placement assistance. Both our student and attorney members are dedicated to mutual self-help and to upholding the highest in professional ethics.

Currently, PAD's total membership is 91,000. We are neither "exclusive" nor "discriminatory" in the traditional fraternity sense, as more than 3,000 law students become PAD members each year without restriction by reason of sex, race, color, creed, national origin or even grade point average.

Our membership currently includes approximately 15,000 women. PAD was the first previously all-male law fraternity to admit women (1970) and, in 1972, was the first to accomplish a merger with a major women's law fraternity, bringing more than 5,000 women attorneys into our ranks at that time.

It is important to note that participation in Phi Alpha Delta does not end with one's graduation from law school, for we have alumni chapters chartered in 75 North American cities and metropolitan areas. The attorney members of these PAD groups gather regularly for social and professional functions and are available for participation with PAD law school chapters in their area, particularly for service as guest speakers, on panels, in seminars and to provide personal career counselling and job placement assistance.

Phi Delta Phi Legal Fraternity

President: George Dunlap
Vice-President: Jeff Rosen
Treasurer: Kevin Parke
Historian: Lynn B. Miller
Secretary: Rhonda Brannon
Social: Angela Fick

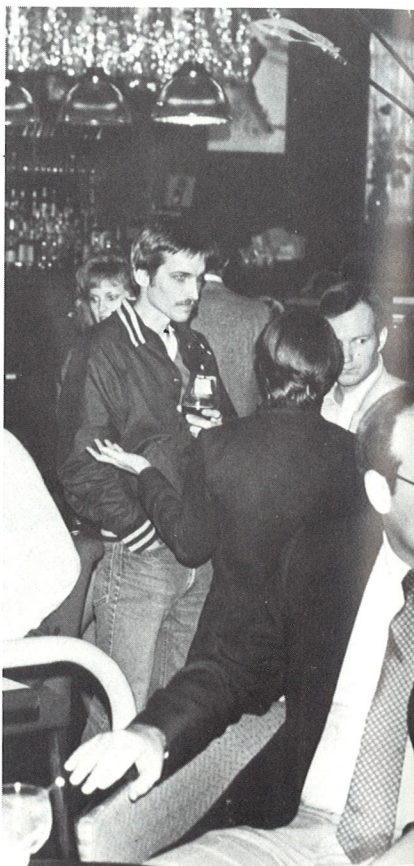

Phi Delta Phi is an international legal fraternity whose ranks are only open to students who rank in the top one-third of their class. The fraternity sponsors practice exams for first year students to provide exposure to law school exam taking.

Phi Delta Phi's recruiting happy hour drew smiles from normally serious studiers, Lynn Miller, Vicki Cregger, James Munisteri and Diane Snelson.

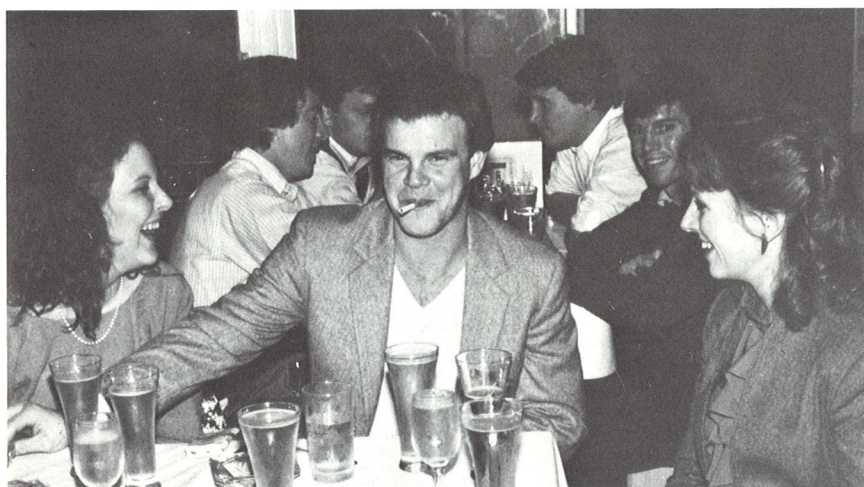

"Cheers" — Tom Bullion and Larry Smith drink to good grades.

The recruiting "Happy Hour" was held at Dallas' ritzy "Elan" lounge.

Officers: Eddie Martin, President Wade Caldwell, David Willis and front row — Randal Duke and Jill Burrow.

DELTA THETA PHI

Delta Theta Phi is an international legal fraternity. The John Hemphill Senate at S.M.U. sponsors many social activities including "Happy Hours" at a number of Dallas Bars. It's membership includes over 30 students.

SBA endorses candidates

At a special meeting of the SBA Executive Council held on March 21 candidates for the office of President, Vice-President, and Secretary presented platforms soliciting the endorsement of the council. The criteria used by the council was a dedication to the university, a thorough understanding of the job requirements and an appreciation for the unique relationship between the university and the students of the School of Law. The Executive Council is pleased to endorse Mr. Brad Gahm for President, Mr. Arif Virji for Vice-President, and Ms. Holly Stroud for Secretary. The council felt that these individuals have the experience and dedication to serve the student senate and Southern Methodist University with distinction.

Candidates submit platforms

The following are platforms submitted to the SBA Election Committee. The Advocate was allowed to publish only those platforms which were submitted within the deadline set by that committee and thus not all candidates have platforms present in this issue. Each platform was copied exactly from the copy presented to the committee and no spelling or grammatical changes have been made. This issue is done totally as a service to the election committee and the candidates and in no way is to be considered as an endorsement of any of the candidates by The Advocate or any member of its staff.

Without further comment here are the candidates and the offices for which they are running:

President

Jim Walker

My tenure as Texas State Bar Representative and my involvement in various committees of the Executive Council has enabled me to observe first-hand the responsibilities that accompany the office of President. I am convinced that if I am elected President, I will be able to accomplish a great deal for the law school and its students.

I would approach the office from the standpoint of one question: How can I help to improve our law school? My past experience as a voting member of the Executive Council suggests a number of possible answers.

First, I would vigorously seek a greater percentage of our student activity fee from the SMU Student Senate. This would allow us to spend the additional money according to the special needs and schedules of law students.

Second, I would work to create a more effective working relationship between the SBA and representatives of law student and other related groups so they will understand that SBA resources are not limited to funds alone.

Third, I would continue our efforts to increase parking space and provide adequate safety lighting where necessary.

Forth, I would work to substantially improve conditions in the Clyde Emery Student Lounge.

Fifth, I would fund the yearbook as an independent student organization to ensure its permanence as a publication.

Finally, I would work early and hard to continue the success we've enjoyed with Barrister's Ball.

I hope each of you will support me in these efforts by giving me your vote for SBA President.

Michael Truncale

Michael Truncale has demonstrated his determination to make the SBA a vehicle for addressing the substantive issues affecting SMULS.

As a representative on the SBA, a coordinator of the Faculty Evaluation Process, and as chairperson of the Speakers Committee, Michael Truncale has worked to enhance the opportunities available to SMULS.

He is committed to providing meaningful opportunities for SMULS—especially in the areas of job placement and curriculum offerings.

1. JOB PLACEMENT—Michael will work to implement an aggressive policy that provides more job opportunities for all law students by expanding the interview season and recruiting more firms to interview on campus. Michael supports efforts to make the placement process more equitable so that all students, regardless of class rank, are given greater opportunities to interview. Also, Michael will seek to institute a Career Week for students to learn effective interviewing techniques and to explore career opportunities in law.

2. CURRICULUM—Michael will work to increase the availability of courses most often requested by the students and tested on the bar examination.

3. MICHAEL SEEKS TO ACHIEVE THE FOLLOWING GOALS:

A. Increase library access by implementing measures expanding library hours and excluding undergraduates during the exam reading period.

B. Continue to support and improve the frequency and quality of SBA Social Activities.

C. Enhance the quality of JURIS ANNUM and the Advocate through the establishment of a Publications Committee.

Michael will devote his entire time and effort to make the SBA responsive and responsible. Elect Michael Truncale for SBA President.

Pam Buchmeyer-Aymond

The successful SBA president must be equal parts administrator, diplomat and motivator. An administrator who cannot work with our diverse student groups, faculty and administration will shackle the SBA's effectiveness. Similarly, a "nice guy" who does not have the organization and force of will to get things going, will not accomplish much in a short academic year. Either an administrator or a diplomat who cannot motivate maximum in-

The campaign trail this year for SBA and ABA positions was very heated. The position of SBA president required a runoff with several recounts required. The election committee really had their work cut out for them. The final victors were Michael Truncale (President), Eric Miller (Vice-President) and Jana Miller (Secretary).

Of special recognition is the victory of Brad Gahm as President of the entire SMU student body. We wish him well in a tough job.

Three long years of hard work came to an end for the class of 1984 during graduation ceremonies at Moody Coliseum.

Graduating students were hooded and received their diplomas from members of the law school faculty and Dean Jeswald Salacuse. Some of the students were hooded by relatives who were alumni of the SMU school of law. The ceremonies were conducted by Dean Salacuse, SMU President L. Donald Shields, and outgoing Student Bar Association President Clyde Siebman.

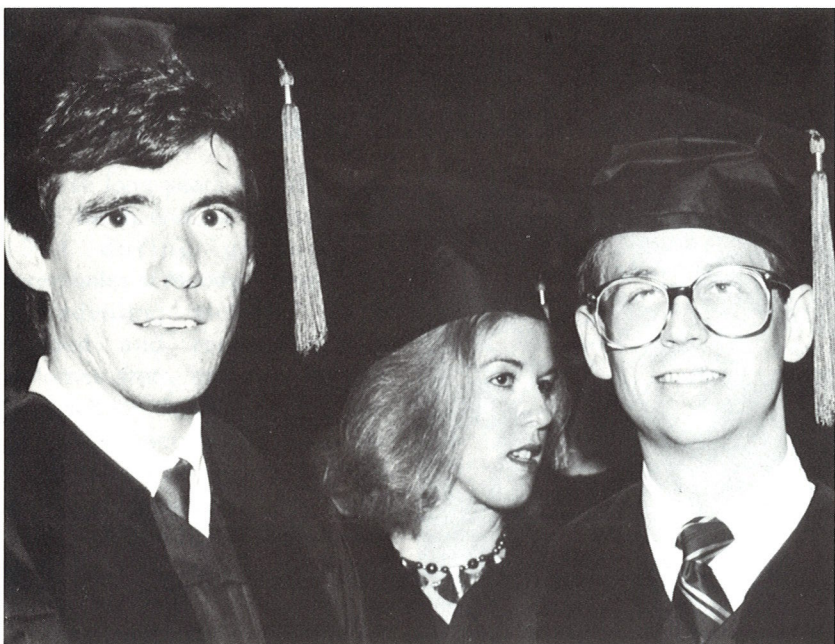

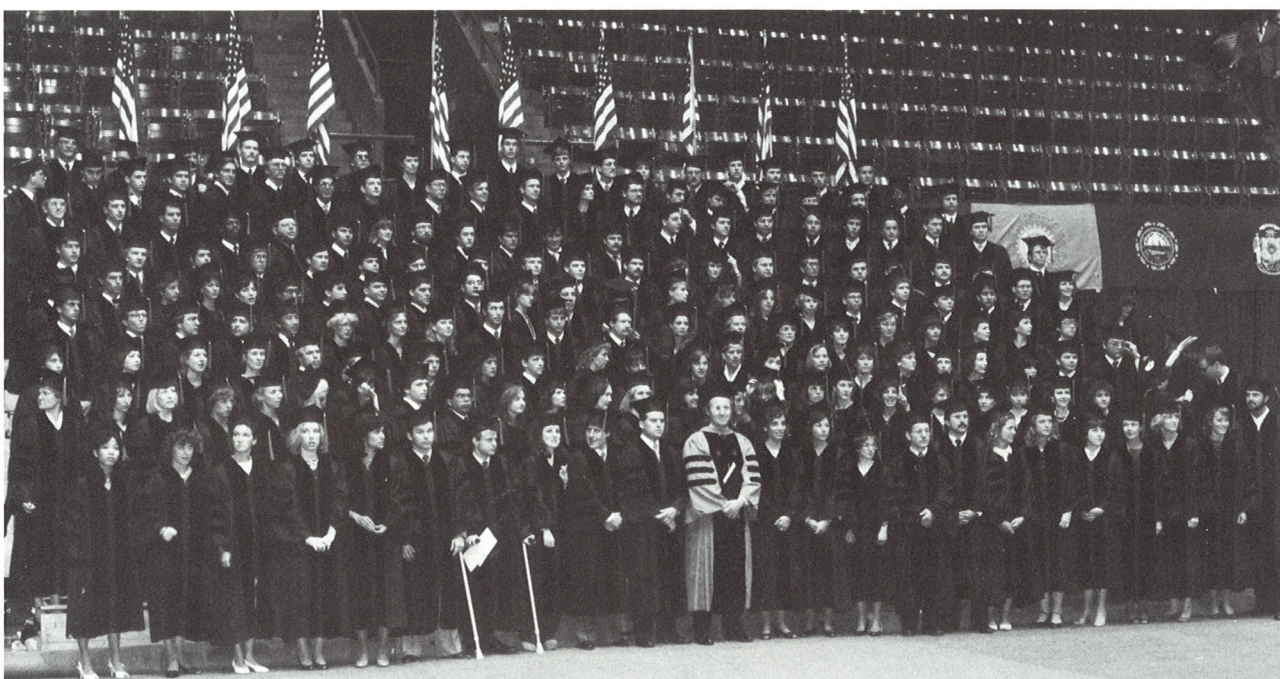

Students participating included J.D. candidates as well as M.C.L. and Masters of Law Students.
