ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This composition could not have been accomplished without the help of my advisor, Dr. Xi Wang; her patience and encouragement throughout my time at SMU has allowed my musical language to grow and flourish and become more personal. I am forever grateful for Dr. Robert Frank and Dr. Kristina Nielsen whose understanding and encouragement has allowed my curiosity to become more productive than ever. I would like to thank the following people for their wisdom and encouragement over the years: Drs. Richard Cantwell, Jim Graves, Melissa Lewis, Marty Michelson, Brint Montgomery, Bryan Powell, and Marilyn Rosfeld. Additionally, I would like to especially thank Dr. Mark Reighard, Prof. Ken Rosfeld, the Ronald E. McNair Post-Baccalaureate Achievement Program and Dr. Kim Rosfeld and Jocelyn Gordon; these people changed the course of my life forever and I could not possibly imagine what or where I would be without them. This thesis is dedicated to my grandparents, Don and Carol Dickerson, whose love for me has exceeded every bound imaginable.

The popular novel Nausea, by Jean-Paul Sartre, tells the story of a fictional adventurer, Antoine Roquentin, and his struggle to understand the surrounding world. This novel illustrates the basics of Sartre's existentialism. Sartre introduced the concept of "bad faith," by which he meant the delusion that things in our lives must always be as they are. "Bad faith" and freedom are the core of Sartre's message. Sartre shares the deep irony that we are "condemned to freedom" and implores us to understand responsibility in a more meaningful way. His philosophy forces us to own up to what we have made of ourselves. Unlike Nietzsche, Sartre did not believe in innate purpose or that people were, necessarily, at the whim of their backgrounds, culture, or environment. Sartre thought that whoever and wherever we were, the fundamental choices relating to our experience in life and identity rest solely upon our shoulders.

In Nausea, Roquentin begins to understand "the absurdity of the world" when he sees objects "as they are," apart from the lens of our normal, human presumptions. For brief moments, Roquentin finds himself in disoriented and confused states, unable to remember the purposes of various objects. This work is a journey through, "nausea," that strange state of affairs where we begin to dread our ineffable freedom. Seeing the "absurdity of the world," we realize the terrifying "anguish" of our existence. Sartre's focus on these frightening moments and words like "anguish" or “condemned” are not only intended to show the strange and terrifying aspects of our lives. Rather, amid all the strangeness lies an endless palette of choices.

The first movement, “A Dredge Defined its Shadow,” comes from a quote by Roquentin as he meticulously documents his environment. The music depicts a series of details interrupted by stabilizing elements. The swirling sound of the flute and stochastic middle-ground represent the encroaching “nausea,” and the sharp interruptions by the percussion demonstrate our desire to break away from our disoriented state. The second movement, “Contingency and Delusion,” was inspired by a moment in the novel where Roquentin begins to understand the depth of his freedom. In his case, this is liberating. More often though, at least in Sartre’s estimation, people are overcome by their “bad faith.” Therefore, the ending of the second movement, echoing back to the works opening, symbolizes a return to the cycle of nausea until one can liberate oneself from the shackles of normality.

Detailed description: This is a page of a musical score for orchestra, page 21. It begins with a section marked 'A' and 'Tempo primo'. The score is divided into two systems. The first system includes woodwinds (Piccolo, Flutes, Oboes, Clarinets, Bassoons, Contrabassoon), strings (Violins, Violas, Violas, Cellos, Double Basses), and percussion (Tympani, Snare, Anvil, Bass Drum, Tam-Toms, Xylophone). The second system includes strings (Violins, Violas, Violas, Cellos, Double Basses). The score features various dynamics (p, mp, f, ff, sfz, p sub, fpp) and articulation marks. There are also performance instructions like 'Flute', 'To Picc.', 'Piccolo', 'To B. Cl.', 'Clarinet in Bb', 'Tam-Toms', 'lv.', 'Snare', 'To Xyl.', 'Bass Drum', and 'Anvil', 'lv.'. The page number '21' is at the top left, and the number '3' is at the bottom center.
