I. General Statement

In May, 1970, the School of Law completed its forty-fifth academic year. At that time degrees were awarded to those who completed the requirements for their degrees in August 1969, December 1969, and May 1970. The following tabular analysis reflects comparative data with respect to degrees conferred or certificates granted during the period 1964-1970:

	1964	1965	1966	1967	1968	1969	1970

Appendix A contains detailed information regarding the 1970 degree candidates, honors and awards, and student activities and organizations for the year 1969-1970.

Last year I commented on the effect of change—social, political, economic, and technological—on legal education and legal institutions. During the academic year 1969-1970 this change moved apace. We are challenged not only by the complexity of change but also by the crisis of increasing costs of staffing and operating a private professional school. There was a time when those in private education were confident that no matter what the difficulty private education would somehow survive. This is no longer a viable proposition. While there are options available, they must be considered. Assistance from the state, consortiums with sister institutions, increasing the productivity of the operation at a given level so that more can be done at the same or less cost are all possibilities for hard thought and discussion.

Meanwhile, the Law School continues to keep abreast of the changing scene in its curriculum and program. I have talked with alumni and other members of the bench and bar who say that our graduates demonstrate splendid technical skills coupled with a genuine concern for the shaping of legal institutions to preserve a free society. The balance between the abstract and the practical is a delicate one and requires continued vigilance by the faculty to avoid too much stress on either side.

During the year 1969-1970 the University engaged in a major self-governance study which was adopted by the Board of Trustees at its regular meeting in May. The acceptance of the report means that each of the divisions of the University is enjoined to initiate appropriate action to adopt constitutions and bylaws to assure shared governance by administrators, faculty, and students. The transition will not be a difficult one for the Law School, for we are already involving students in committee work and faculty meetings. Moreover, many of our extant procedures will need only to be codified into formal documents to provide a set of working rules that comport with the new governance plan. The students have shown responsibility and maturity in dealing with and resolving problems which require attention from time to time.

II. Faculty

Appendix B sets out in detail faculty bibliographies and activities for the year 1969-1970.

III. Degree Programs

The School of Law operated the following major programs during the year 1969-1970:

(A) The three-year Juris Doctor program in the undergraduate Day Division.

(B) The general graduate program for both part-time and full-time students leading to the degree of Master of Laws.

(D) The graduate program in international and comparative law leading to the degree of Master of Comparative Law.

(E) The graduate program in research and writing leading to the degree of Doctor of the Science of Law.

IV. Curriculum

The Curriculum in effect for the summer session 1969 consisted of 10 sections of courses and seminars; during the regular session 110 sections of courses and seminars were offered. Under the program for the Juris Doctor degree, the student had to complete 50 hours of required courses and 39 hours of electives, at least one course involving international and comparative law or jurisprudence, a planning course, and a seminar in which a substantial paper is required.

During the year new offerings included Food and Drug Law (with special emphasis on dangerous drugs), offered by Michael R. Sonnenreich, Esq.; Mental Conditions and Criminal Liability, offered by Professor Harvey Wingo; Legislation (Federal), offered by H. Barefoot Sanders, Esq.; and Advanced Criminal Law, offered by Professor Walter W. Steele, Jr.

The tuition during the regular session was $1,600 for the two semesters.

During the year we continued, as in prior years, an intensive program of recruiting in colleges and universities throughout the country. This has resulted in an increasing number of well-qualified applicants.

Three professors visited 36 schools, interviewing 358 prospective students. Visits were made to colleges and universities in the following states: Arkansas, Connecticut, Georgia, Kansas, Louisiana, Massachusetts, New Mexico, New York, Oklahoma, Tennessee, and Texas.

VI. Law Library and Plant Improvements

During the year $163,719.31 was expended on the library operation. About 10,772 volumes were added, making a total of 165,501 volumes. As I mentioned in last year's report, we have an excellent standing among the law school libraries of the country, and with the completion in 1970 of the magnificent new Underwood Law Library, we will have a research library of exceptional quality in every respect.

From the time of its first opening in 1950 no major change had been made in the decor or furnishings of the first floor of Lawyers Inn. During the year the faculty lounge, main lounge, TV room, and guest apartment were refurbished to provide a most attractive and inviting new look.

VII. Alumni Relations, Law School Fund, Student Aid

Eugene Jericho, Esq., President, and James A. Williams, Esq., and A Hardcastle, Esq., Vice Presidents, of the Law Alumni Association, headed the annual Law School Fund drive for the year. We continued, as in prior years, the practice of inviting to a series of breakfasts the representatives who worked on the Fund, members of the faculty, and students. These breakfast meetings have proved to be especially effective in providing an interchange of views among faculty, students, and alumni.

A detailed report of the Law School Fund for 1969-1970 was incorporated in a special issue of The Brief of the School of Law and was mailed to alumni and friends in November, 1970. Total gifts and scholarships from alumni and non-alumni totaled $137,351.34. These contributions have been used for financial assistance to students in various ways: loans, tuition grants, research assistants, expenses of moot court, law journals, Student Bar Association, and the like. Alumni gifts totaled $63,418.30 with 33% of alumni participating. This compares with gifts of $51,105.03 from alumni and a 37.6% participation during the year 1968-1969. The faculty of the School of Law also contributed generously to the Fund.

Other events relating to alumni relations were as follows:

On September 10, 1969, those contributing named scholarships and amounts of $100 or more for the 1968-1969 Law School Fund were honored at a Century Club dinner at the Student Center.

On November 1, 1969, the officers, directors, and members of the Law Alumni Association attended a breakfast at Lawyers Inn as part of Homecoming activities.

VIII. Publications

The Southwestern Law Journal published again this past year the Annual Survey of Texas Law, which was well received. The Journal of Air Law and Commerce sponsored a Symposium on Air Accident Investigation and Litigation which was held March 18-20, 1970. This program exemplified the same high standards of the previous years' similar conferences.

Professors Wingo and Taubenfeld were faculty advisers to the Southwestern Law Journal and Journal of Air Law and Commerce, respectively, during the year.

Other publications during the year included The Brief of the School of Law in four issues edited by Assistant Dean Max K. Jones, and the Law School Yearbook, edited by Martin Donovan.

IX. Legal Clinic

The Legal Clinic under the direction of Professor Walter W. Steele, Jr., with Miss Sue Goolsby as Assistant Director, had 455 new cases opened during the period under review. Of these cases, 119 required court action. Video tape equipment is now being used in the Clinic to record most of the student-client interviews. The taped interview is critiqued with the student by the Clinic Director and then erased. This procedure has resulted in substantial improvement in the students' ability to conduct a professional interview.

The faculty has voted to expand the Legal Clinic curriculum beginning with the summer, 1970 term. The specifics of that action will be reported in the next Dean's Report.

X. Placement

Associate Dean David W. Purcell, assisted by Mrs. Lillian Blair, offered students a thorough program of placement. Students desiring to take advantage of this service were counselled in the preparation of attractive individual brochures. The number of interviewing firms was larger than in any previous year, and came from every section of the country. A tally of the graduating seniors shows that 48 were placed with law firms, 20 were placed with corporate legal counsel, 10 were in military service, 5 were placed with government agencies, 3 accepted clerkships with judges, 17 were in other activities, and 30 were either uncommitted or had failed to inform the Placement Office as of September 1, 1969.

XI. Other Events of the Year

On April 2, 1970, the Supreme Court of Texas made its annual visit to the Law School, spending time with the senior students in informal discussions regarding recent developments in the law.

The annual spring meeting of the Board of Visitors, the Law School Committee of the Board of Trustees, faculty, student representatives and others, was held on April 22, 1970. The participants met at noon for a luncheon in the Junior Ballroom of the Umphrey Lee Student Center, following which reports were given by the chairmen of the various Law School committees with questions and discussion. The meeting concluded with a dinner.

On Sunday, May 17, approximately 200 alumni and friends attended an open house, honoring Professors Jan P. Charmatz, Clyde Emery, and Roy R. Ray, and Mrs. Margaret Seifert, recently retired members of the faculty and staff. We are deeply indebted to these individuals for the services they have performed.

XII. Continuing Legal Education

The Criminal Justice Program, initiated during the 1969-1970 academic year, is designed as a course in continuing legal education to focus on the ever-expanding role of the law in contemporary society. The program will serve as a vehicle for analyzing the complexities of justice and order. Participating in the program through various symposia will be members of the legal profession, sociologists, psychologists, doctors, pharmacists, law enforcement personnel, government leaders, professional and community leaders, and representatives of business and industry. It is planned that the program will provide a forum for the airing of different opinions on some of the unique legal and ethical dilemmas resulting from our nation's cultural diversification.

During the 1969-1970 academic year the project directors and coordinators of the Criminal Justice Program were Roy R. Anderson, Jr., executive director, and George A. Pelletier, director, Associate Professor of Law and Associate Dean for Academic Affairs at S.M.U.

The first major project of the Criminal Justice Program was The Short Course on Drug Abuse, a highly successful symposium drawing nation-wide attention and commendation. It was attended by over 400 participants, many of whom were law enforcement personnel who were provided tuition aid, through a technical assistance grant funded by the federal government. The program was sponsored in conjunction with the North Central Texas Council of Governments and the Southwestern Law Journal, April 8-10, 1970, on the SMU campus. The Short Course was an intensive study of the problem of drug abuse in its present environment. There were approximately 25 speakers representing various disciplines concerned with the problem of drug abuse. Many of the papers presented at the symposium will be published in the Southwestern Law Journal. The proceedings including floor discussion and relevant appendices will be published in an additional hard-bound volume.

Because of the great need for the education of the public in the area of drug abuse and the necessity of preserving the information presented at the Short Course, video tapes of the speakers' presentations were made and these tapes will be made available for law enforcement agencies, law schools and other interested groups. Basic encounter groups were featured as an integral part of the program. Volunteer participants were afforded the opportunity to exchange feelings and viewpoints in informal sessions. This experiment served to emphasize generational and ideological conflicts which are part of the drug abuse problem in our nation today.

The School of Law and Practising Law Institute of New York City, the oldest continuing legal education group in the United States, entered into an agreement in 1969 to co-sponsor programs in Dallas. Practising Law Institute has a long and distinguished record of service to lawyers across the country. The programs that were held at the law school through June of 1970 included: Professional Corporations, Pollution & Industrial Waste, Criminal Advocacy, Legal and Business Problems of Shopping Centers, Tax Reform Act of 1969, Land Acquisition and Assembly, Joint Ventures in Real Estate, and Franchising. There were 480 lawyers from Texas, surrounding states, the midwest and as far away as Florida and California in attendance. Students have also been invited to attend without charge.

XIII. University Administration

I express my sincerest appreciation to the University administration and all of the members of the bar and judiciary who have assisted us in so many ways during this year. We sincerely seek your continued counsel and guidance in grappling with the complex problems that lie ahead.

THE STUDY OF LAW AND THE LAW SCHOOL

BY A. J. THOMAS, JR.

The last time I received notice from this podium occurred when the Dean, in introducing the members of his faculty, failed completely to take notice of me. My heart sank. Had I been removed from the payroll? Thank God for tenure, for when this lapse (which because he is the Dean I charitably attribute to forgetfulness) was brought to his attention, he promptly made amends. It may well be that I am granted this honor of giving the welcoming speech to this assembly because he wants to make up for this past wound to my sensitive feelings. Around here it is either feast or famine.

Probably, however, he recognizes my erudition and scholarship for I did graduate from Texas A&M. In any event, standing here before you does make me feel somewhat sad. I have noted that this yearly keynote speech generally falls upon a senior member of the faculty. The honor having now been awarded to me brings about a realization that I am really over thirty. I can no longer be trusted.

My remarks today are directed primarily to entering law students: primarily because the second and third year students must be already deeply enmeshed in their studies. I see few of their faces here. Therefore, I am going to attempt to aid the rather bewildered person whom, I trust, is now at the threshold of a career in law, by pouring out words of wisdom about the law and the law school.

As an innocent, country boy, I came to law school believing that next to Godliness and cleanliness was legalness (that surely highlights the generation gap in my case doesn't it?) But, I was almost undone by the jargon of the law. So I would like to bring to your attention a few legal sayings which you will hear from now to eternity particularly by bar meeting speakers. A "bar meeting", for your information, is a get together of lawyers . . . the word, "bar" is used in more than one sense here.

A most popular saying is that "the law is a jealous mistress." Every lawyer uses this as an explanation at one time or another, depending upon the circumstances in which he finds himself. In a public speech, it sort of gives a devil-may-care, man-of-the-world, salacious content even though law is simply not what I would imagine (note, I say, imagine), a mistress to be—jealous or otherwise. But then, as we say in French—Chacun a son goût, which can be translated for our purposes "Every lawyer to his own tastes."

Another famous and sonorous expression is "the law is a seamless web." I have never exactly figured out its meaning, but it does sound good. It may signify that you go round and round never getting any place in the law, or, it may be the method by which the lawyer, like the spider, ensnares his victims. Even the Evangelist Luke noted that lawyers weren't the hottest things going: "Woe unto you also, ye lawyers, for ye laden men with burdens grievous to be borne, and ye yourself touch not the burdens with one of your fingers." You do come to law school, however, to master this seamless web of law and you may note that even as lesser intellects have done at other law schools that the web seems to be filled with wide open gaps.

A maxim that I have always found to be quaint is one that was coined by Dickens and is often resorted to by non-lawyers when describing our discipline—that is, "The law is a arse." I think no definition is needed here, even though Dickens used a distinct English spelling.

There are also those famous words which are annually resorted to at the beginning of a law school career by some professor of sadistic bent, with a Scrooge-like wringing of hands, "Look to the man or woman on your right. Look to the man or woman on your left. One of these will not be with us next year." So much for brilliant legal clichés.

Now let us turn our attention to those somewhat antagonistic groups: the law professor and the law student, between whom there is a love-hate complex. Each is secretly convinced that the law school would probably be a better place without the existence of the other. Despite the fact that law professors are uniformly kind, understanding, helpful and generous in their dealings with law students, for reasons which I have never understood, the student always seems to have an impression of law professors as being aloof, tyrannical, stubborn and downright mean. Law Students view themselves as hardworking, intelligent, misunderstood and deserving of an A on each and every examination. As they always tell you, "I have worked harder on this course than I ever worked in my life."

And, when a student fails, he knows exactly where the blame lies. Through no fault of his own, he has had the misfortune to fall within the clutches of a professor whose inabilities as a teacher are exceeded only by the stupidity of his examination and grading system.

As to law school examinations—let me give you a word of advice. NEVER believe a second year student. You will find the second year student, having survived the first year in law school, has, in his mind, become the fountainhead of all wisdom. He is Holmes, Brandeis and Cardozo wrapped into one. This is true when it comes to his evaluation and assessment of all of the foibles of the professors particularly with relation to examinations. The second year student may tell you that a little learning is a useful thing in a sort of "don't knock it 'til you tried it" manner, but he will certainly warn you to disregard any study advice from the professor which calls for assignment and periodic review. What can a professor know about the latest study techniques? Times have changed since he went to law school . . . study your own way, develop your individuality, do your own thing!

Second year advice also will warn you not to clutter up your mind with useless information, rather spend your worthwhile time outguessing the professors by strategically concentrating on the parts of the course that you think the professor thinks are important—then you can forget the rest of his material which was just thrown in to mystify and traumatize the class. The second year student also believes that an illegible handwriting is a great asset. It enlivens a professor's boring grading hours by presenting a cryptographic challenge to him for which he will be most appreciative and such appreciation will be reflected in his grading.

Little need be said about the third year student. He has suddenly realized that he is about to face a hostile world. His eyes have become glazed and lusterless. He is fearful and extremely critical of his legal education in all of its aspects. His father has asked him to draw up a will and he doesn't even know where to find a standard form—much less does he possess such vital information as to the location of the nearest court house. His tuition money has certainly been thrown away.

You probably have already discovered that legal education is carried on by the case and Socratic method. It is the gospel of legal educators that students can only be taught the law by having them read cases and asking them questions about these cases. It is said that a Harvard Law School professor believes that he has had a magnificent class hour if he manages to get through it without answering a single student question. To the student, the case and question method is sheer madness. The professor always seems to ask the things the student doesn't know. From the professor's point of view there is a method in this madness, for he can retain his knowledge or lack thereof, to himself. There may be a slight grain of truth in the statement of the mother who said to her failing law school son that the "law professors couldn't have been very smart or else they wouldn't have asked you so many questions but would have taught you something."

Perhaps it would be propitious at this point to give you a quick rundown of certain of your courses so that these will not be completely new. You will begin with contracts, torts, property, crimes and procedure. These are aristocrats of the law—at least so I am led to believe from the professors in these areas. My memory of contracts is rather vague; there was something about offer by post, acceptance by post, which the pundits told me was good for the making of a contract if there was also consideration. Consideration is a must—why, I do not exactly recall. In my later studies, I discovered that the French have managed for generations to have contracts without consideration. But then, you know the French can get away with anything. I pass this gem on to you. It is the type of extraneous fact that enlightens exam papers. I can shed very little light on the law of property. The opening words uttered by my professor in property law have remained with me always:

Ontogeny Recapitulates Phylogeny in Law As Well As In Biology.

He lost me after that—an anti-property complex resulted. Therefore, I have remained poor. I should have been instructed in poverty law but, ironically, we had to await the affluent society of today for the introduction of this course. Further recollections of the law of property involve such improbable terms as fee simple and fee tail, which I am told derive from Norman French. I must admit some deficiency in this subject. I do hope all of you took Norman French before coming to law school. Oh yes, I further remember that property law seemed to revolve around something called the Rule in Shelley's Case which goes like this:

When an ancestor by any gift or conveyance taketh an estate of freehold and in the same gift or conveyance an estate is limited, either mediately or immediately, to his heirs in fee or in tail, the heirs are words of limitation of the estate and not words of purchase.

Now you see why we stress clarity of expression in law.

Torts is a fun course with a Freudian touch. You will be studying about a Mrs. Palsgraf, a little old lady, who sues a railroad company for injury caused by some platform scales falling on her because of an explosion; the package of explosives was dropped by a fellow passenger who was pushed into a crowded car by two railroad employees. Around these simple every day facts, a decision was written in favor of the railroad. In looking over my law school notes on this case I found the following statement which may help you:

When negligence fell into the stream of proximate causation and duties rippled out in waves of foreseeableness, Mrs. Palsgraf was downstream without a paddle.

Sort of reminds you of that sweet old Pennsylvania Dutch song made famous by Lawrence Welk, "Throw Mama from the Train".

Crimes is also a fun course. You learn how as a lawyer you can prevent the guilty from going to jail. Thus, you can return criminals to the bosom of their families to go and sin no more, all for a nice fat fee. Procedure contains useful material on how to mess up a case and get thrown out of the court before the decision goes against you on the merits.

I should say a few words about constitutional law. The justices of the Supreme Court who devote their lives to this mighty area of the law, are real wags. Much of their time is spent looking at dirty movies and reading dirty books to find out whether they fall within a legal definition of obscenity. With all the long hard hours they put in on the subject, the definition is still rather vague. One justice let us in on this secret when he categorically stated that although he could not define hard core pornography, he knew it when he saw it. Considering some of the movies, books and stage productions that have gotten by the Court today, he must have less than 20-20 vision.

I could go on and tell you how in family law you will be taught how to become a legalistic Dear Abby and Dr. Brothers rolled into one; in Ethics you will be told exactly the rules to follow in the practice so that you will not be disbarred. Evidence is a sneaky course in which you devote more time learning exceptions to rules than the rules themselves. But I must go on to more weighty matters, for traditionally the welcoming discourse has always contained some words concerning the state of society and the state of law in that society.

In speaking of the state of our society the despondent words of Simon Bolivar the Liberator written in 1829 in relation to Spanish America would seem to be apt. He stated: "There is no good faith in America, constitutions are printed matter; elections, battles; freedom, anarchy; and life a torment." I could possibly say no more in this regard, but three editorials in the Sunday New York Times of August 9th caught my attention. I would like to quote excerpts from these to you for their contents are perhaps even more illustrative of our time. The first is entitled "Invading the Courtroom." This editorial declares: "The weird gun battle that took the lives of a California judge, two convicts and a man seeking to free them has provided terrifying validation of the condemnation which by bizarre coincidence, Chief Justice Burger was delivering that same day of "unseemly, outrageous episodes" in courtrooms. Even in retrospect, it seems inconceivable that a confederate could invade a courtroom while two prisoners were on trial, pull weapons out of a flight bag and cow all the assembled forces of the law. But the self-identification of the three as revolutionaries makes it impossible to divorce their action from the incidents the Chief Justice was deploring—incidents in which the defendants who have abandoned all respect for the judicial process do everything in their power to discredit and destroy it. It is nonsense to imply, as did one critic of the Burger remarks, that those who insist on decorum in the courtroom are endeavoring to set the stage for a declaration of martial law that would stifle the rights of the accused persons. This is a classic case of shifting the fault from the offender to the offended. The surest way to turn courthouses into garrisons replete with all the trappings of a police state lies in systematic efforts by militant foes of the established order to upset it by outbreaks in the courtroom, whether in the form of mass demonstrations or other contemptuous behavior. . . . The American system requires civilized conduct on the part of everyone—prosecutors, defendants, lawyers, court personnel and spectators—if it is to fulfill its essential mission of protecting the rights of all Americans, including those who want to make America over in a new image.”

On the same page of this edition of the Times is another editorial: “In the Nation: There is No Law.” This has to do with a campaign being waged by a Mr. Walinsky for the office of Attorney General of New York. His point is that there is no longer a functioning system of law in America. He cites certain incidents to bear out his thesis.

“In Harlem a black woman asks why nothing is done about the drug traffic. Why does she care? Her teen-age daughter is in the hospital from an overdose of heroin. Where did the child get it? From a schoolmate whose father bags the stuff in an apartment on the same street where the mother of the victim lives. Since she knows this, she must know that the police could find it out too. Thus, this becomes prima facie evidence that drugs flourish in New York and elsewhere mostly owing to police corruption reaching so high that cops on the beat shrug and say to themselves, Why bother? But it means other things too. It means that while drugs can be had so easily, virtually on every street corner, every rehabilitation program no matter how effective, will be overwhelmed with victims. And it means that those who see all this on their door steps, like the Harlem mother, cannot be induced to respect or rely upon the law in America; for them to all intents and purposes, there is no law.

“On another occasion in an upstate lake community angry fishermen have suddenly found their livelihood gone because fish from the waters they have worked all their lives can no longer be eaten, due to mercury pollution. These are law-abiding people victimized in one crushing blow brought about by industrialists and farmers who for years have evaded or ignored the unenforced antipollution laws and although now the public is tardily and partially being protected against the result, the fishermen find themselves with little or no recourse. For them as for the woman in Harlem—there is no law.

“In a Union meeting, confrontation is had with chemical workers with lung disease, the hazards of their trade ignored by those who supposedly enforce industrial safety standards. Moreover, hundreds of white construction workers come from out of state to take jobs on numerous building projects sponsored by state government—despite the nondiscrimination laws that ought to make many of these places available to the unemployed blacks of the city ghettos. For these victims, too, there is no law—at least no law that matters. Thus today defrauded consumers, homeowners with uncollected garbage, commuters who cannot get to work, persons awaiting trial in impossibly crowded courts, students in institutions that do not teach, pedestrians breathing air noxious with pollution, utility users unable to get adequate service from protected monopolies, victims of the thousands of crimes that annually go unsolved, motorists in massive traffic jams—all are victims either of irrelevant law, lack of law, unworkable law, unenforced law, corruption, official disinterest or official disability. In this real and practical sense, for all these millions of peoples there is no law.”

For the third editorial I switch to the drama section of the New York Times. Here a new play, The Architect and the Emperor of Assyria, is reviewed under the title, Here Nothing is Forbidden. The editorial states in discussing the play:

“During the course of the two and a half hours, one man, the Emperor, strains to defecate and almost does in full view (indeed, feces always associated in the play with God, are a dominant symbol throughout). The Emperor also dons false breasts and a bra, girdle and silk stockings; he hilariously simulates a childbirth, complete with mother, child, doctor and priest all enacted by himself, and finally he stands trial for murdering his mother, whose body he fed to his German shepherd dog, ‘the one single being’ he ever loved. The other character, the nearly nude Architect, savors self-flagellation and masturbation, invokes magic, and at the end kills the Emperor and eats his body, on stage.” The play is described by the Times critic as “the work of a provocative contemporary Spanish playwright which was received with enthusiasm by the younger members of the audience along with that of some critics."

These editorials are disturbing to me. Perhaps they are disturbing to you, also. But one thing I can say. Whether disturbing or not, if they truly exemplify our society, then it is a sick, sick society and as to law in such a society, Forget it! Think it over!
