CONFERRING OF HONORARY DEGREES

JOHN CLARENCE KARCHER, Doctor of Science

Distinguished scientist, inventor and explorer for mineral resources, he was born in Indiana and educated at the Universities of Oklahoma and Pennsylvania. In 1917, while a physicist at the United States Bureau of Standards, he was assigned the problem of designing and constructing a device for detecting and recording blasts from field artillery pieces by sound waves through the air. While testing this device he conceived the idea of using seismic waves through the ground rather than air waves. Through his great perseverance and disciplined imagination this study consummated in the development of the reflection seismograph which became the primary instrument in the search for oil and gas on the earth's land surface and the only practical method of exploration for hydrocarbons beneath the sea. The principal oil and gas reserves of the modern world, a significant factor in the economic expansion of industrialized nations, are the direct result of his application of the basic principles of science to the solution of a need of mankind. For his eminent scientific accomplishments and for his many benefactions to this University we are pleased to honor him today. Mr. President, I have the honor of presenting him for the degree of Doctor of Science, honoris causa.

Presented by Professor Emeritus Arthur Richards

W. PAGE KEETON, Doctor of Laws

Distinguished Scholar, law teacher, University Administrator and Law Reformer, he has provided effective leadership in the administration of justice. A law professor for more than forty years he is recognized as a brilliant classroom teacher. Author of scores of articles in legal periodicals he is acknowledged as one of our ablest Tort Scholars. As Dean of the University of Texas Law School for twenty-five years he has led that institution to its present eminent position. His educational statesmanship was recognized by election as President of the Association of American Law Schools. His dedication to improvement of law culminated in service as Chairman of the Committee which drafted a modern penal code for Texas. In recognition of his scholarship, courageous leadership for intellectual freedom and integrity and his contributions to the administration of justice we are pleased to confer upon him this day the degree of Doctor of Laws, honoris causa.

Presented by Professor Emeritus Roy Robert Ray
