

Transfer of Texas Species of Houstonia to Hedyotis (Rubiaceae)

Lloyd H. Shinners<sup>1</sup>

The accepted species of Houstonia in Texas are a diverse lot, ranging from stiffly branched small shrubs of desert mountains to delicate spring annuals of humid pine and hardwood forests. The East-Texas species are obviously to be associated with those long familiar to eastern and northern botanists as Houstonia; the West-Texas plants are a link with dissimilar Mexican species, some of them of questionable generic reference (e.g., those in subgenus Macrohoustonia Gray, Proc. Amer. Acad. 4: 314-316, 1859). The large Old-World genus Hedyotis is similarly varied, and includes some species (e.g., H. Parryi Hance) whose resemblance to perennial southeastern United States species of Houstonia is startling to one not familiar with Hedyotis. This diversity in both genera, and the fluctuating opinions of Bentham and Gray regarding their separation or union, lead me to accept Dr. Fosberg's conclusion (1937) that Houstonia should be merged with Oldenlandia and Hedyotis, under the last name. The names of the Texas species under Hedyotis are listed below in alphabetical order. No attempt is made here to discuss taxonomic status or relationships. All the United States species, particularly those in the H. nigricans complex, are in need of further study.

HEDYOTIS ACEROSA Gray, Pl. Wright. 1 (Smithsonian Contrib. 3 art. 5) : 81. 1852. TYPE: "High prairies, from Live Oak Creek to the Las Moras, Western Texas; June," Wright 237, 1849<sup>2</sup>. Houstonia acerosa Gray, Proc. Amer. Acad. 17: 203. 1882.

<sup>2</sup>The types are listed simply for the convenience of later students of the Texas species. I have not attempted to check them all, although I have seen most of the types of species named by T. & G. and Gray. I am grateful to Dr. F. R. Fosberg for pointing out several nomenclatorial errors in the manuscript, and for permission to include his unpublished new combinations.

In Index Kewensis this is improperly listed as a synonym of the later Oldenlandia glomerata Michx., 1803 (Hedyotis glomerata Michx. Ell., 1817), to make way for the also later Chilean Oldenlandia uniflora Ruiz & Pavon, 1798 (Hedyotis uniflora [R. & P.] DC., 1830, not Lam., 1791).

HEDYOTIS WRIGHTII (Gray) Fosberg, Lloydia 4: 290. 1941. Houstonia Wrightii Gray, Proc. Amer. Acad. 17: 202. 1882. TYPE: "On the Limpio, western Texas, Wright."
