A. Guinea

In December 2008, a military junta led by Colonel Dadis Camara seized power immediately following the public announcement of the death of long-time President Lansana Conte. The coup contravened the Constitution, which provides that the National Assembly speaker should become president if the president dies in office. Camara promised multi-party elections within two years, though many Guineans had serious doubts that he would keep his promise.1 Subsequently, Camara hinted that he would participate as a presidential candidate in the upcoming elections.2 In September, the military junta cracked down on a mass opposition rally in Conakry, killing scores of protesting civilians and sexually assaulting many female protesters.3 In November, amid public international outcry over the atrocities committed by the ruling military junta, the United Nations appointed a three-panel body to investigate possible violations of international human rights law. The International Criminal Court has also requested information on the national investigation into the crimes committed during the September 28 violence.

B. Liberia

Liberia’s Truth and Reconciliation Commission issued its final report in June 2009, finding, among other things, that the current President of Liberia, Ellen Johnson-Sirleaf, had provided financial and moral support to Charles Taylor, the former rebel leader of the brutal guerilla group, the National Patriotic Front of Liberia. Taylor is currently on trial for war crimes and crimes against humanity in The Hague by the UN-backed Special Court for Sierra Leone. Since this revelation, there have been numerous calls for Johnson-Sirleaf to step down. She has subsequently expressed public remorse for her conduct. Johnson-Sirleaf is the first democratically elected female president of an African country, and her administration has been credited for restoring the rule of law in what was once one of the world’s most lawless countries.

C. Niger

In August, a referendum was passed to amend the Constitution to remove presidential term limits. The referendum was widely criticized as a manipulative political ploy by Niger’s President, Mamadu Tandja, and the opposition urged boycott of the referendum. President Tandja dissolved both Parliament and the courts in order to press ahead with the referendum amid widespread international condemnation to the affront on the rule of law in Niger.

D. NIGERIA

The Nigerian government embarked on a comprehensive reform of the oil and gas industry – the country's sole economic product. Since oil was discovered by Shell in 1956 at Oloibiri in the Niger Delta region, the industry has operated under different management structures with various legal frameworks.

The major oil and gas corporation, the Nigerian National Oil Corporation (NNPC) is owned by the Nigerian government. The NNPC is responsible for prospecting and exploiting oil in partnership with international oil companies (IOCs). The Department of Petroleum Resources (DPR), a department under the Ministry of Petroleum, serves as a watchdog for the development of Nigeria's oil and gas resources in order to achieve the optimum exploitation and utilization of petroleum and its derivatives for the maximum benefit of Nigerians. DPR is also responsible for ensuring minimal damage to the environment. Formerly a specialized agency under the NNPC, DPR was transferred in 1988 as a technical division of the Ministry of Petroleum Resources and functions as a regulator of the industry. The National Oil Spill Detection Response Agency (NOSDRA) is the regulatory entity under the Ministry of Environment responsible for enforcement of environmental laws that affect waste management and oil spillage. Its focus is on enforcement of environmental legislation in the petroleum sector, a function that conflicts with the role of the DPR.

The main laws that regulate the energy industry are the Petroleum Act of 1969 and the Petroleum Profits Tax Act of 1959. These and other laws that regulate different aspects of the industry are old and outdated. Current reform efforts have been described as long overdue, with the need to review all aspects of operations in the industry. The proposed energy reform bill seeks to restructure the NNPC by establishing independent entities with minimal interference by the government. The bill also seeks to address current challenges and obstacles that affect efficient exploration and production of oil and gas, such as conflicts of interest between implementing and enforcement agencies, lack of collaboration, and cooperation between enforcement and compliance authorities.

While this reform is a positive development, the proposed bill omits important issues regarding the environment that are an important part of oil operations. The absence of guidelines for environmental protection creates a huge gap for existing agencies that need adequate directions on how to sufficiently address pollution and oil spills, especially in the oil producing region of the Niger Delta. A comprehensive provision on the environment would lead to consideration of environmental judicial institutions by staff trained on environmental issues and citizens' rights of action. The judiciary plays a vital role in decision-making, and as an opinion-former on complex environmental issues. Judges are in a position to resolve issues of conflict of interest and overlaps in legislation on environmental compliance and enforcement by agencies. The current reform process is technocratic, with little or no citizen participation through organized groups. Transforming a major economic sector requires the people's involvement to ensure transparency and accountability in the implementation and enforcement processes.

16. The Nigerian National Petroleum Corporation (NNPC) was established in 1971 under Decree No. 18 to take part in oil prospecting, mining, marketing as well as refining within the oil industry. In 1973 the government pushed for more involvement in the industry by establishing additional equity participation of Shell, Gulf Oil now Chevron, and Mobil now ExxonMobil.

E. SIERRA LEONE*

In December 2008, Justice Umu Hawa Tejan-Jalloh was unanimously approved as Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Sierra Leone by the Parliament of Sierra Leone. Chief Justice Tejan-Jalloh is the first female chief justice in the country, and the third female chief justice in Africa. She had been appointed by the President to act as Chief Justice since January 2008.

In November, the Supreme Court dismissed applications filed by the Sierra Leone Association of Journalists (SLAJ) challenging the constitutionality of Part 5 of the Public Order Act of 1965, which apparently criminalizes libel and seditious acts. Earlier in the year, SLAJ had petitioned the Court, arguing that the statute contravened Section 25 of the 1991 Constitution and that, unless repealed, it posed a grave threat to freedom of expression guaranteed under the Constitution as well as the free flow of information in the country, among other things. The unanimous ruling by the five-judge panel has been severely criticized by journalists who have vowed to work towards repeal of the statute.

A. Sudan

In March, the International Criminal Court (ICC) issued an arrest warrant for Omar Al-Bashir, President of Sudan, for war crimes and crimes against humanity allegedly committed in the strife-ridden Darfur region. The warrant identifies seven counts of violations of international humanitarian law under the Rome Statute for which Al-Bashir was deemed to possess individual criminal liability. Al-Bashir is charged with five counts of crimes against humanity including murder, extermination, forcible transfer, torture, and rape; and two counts of war crimes, including intentionally directing attacks against civilian non-combatants and pillaging. But the warrant did not include a count of genocide because the ICC did not find sufficient evidence to support a charge of genocide against Al-Bashir. This warrant sets an important precedent in international law because it is the first arrest warrant issued by the ICC against a sitting head-of-state.

III. East Africa

A. The East African Community

In November, the East African Community, consisting of Kenya, Tanzania, Uganda, Burundi, and Rwanda, announced its aim to establish a common market by July 2010 that would facilitate the free movement of goods and services among member-states. The region, which boasts a population of 126 million and a combined GDP of $60 billion, is expected to promulgate a legal and political framework for a common market in the next few months, and a monetary union by 2012. Currently, no common market exists in the African continent, though several attempts have been made to establish one.

B. Kenya

In November 2009, Kenya unveiled a Draft Constitution that portends sweeping changes to the political and legal structures of the country. The Draft Constitution addresses a broad spectrum of legal and political issues facing the country including land reforms, organized labor, dual citizenship, gay marriage, and a bill of rights, among other things. The document is expected to be circulated to the Kenyan Parliament this year for debate before being presented to the public sometime next year in the form of a referendum.

C. SOMALIA

In January, the Code of Conduct concerning the Repression of Piracy and Armed Robbery against Ships in the Western Indian Ocean and the Gulf of Aden was adopted in Djibouti (the Djibouti Code of Conduct). The Djibouti Code of Conduct was signed by nine of the countries most affected by Somali piracy, including Djibouti, Ethiopia, Kenya, Madagascar, the Maldives, the Seychelles, Somalia, Tanzania, and Yemen. The Code requires member-states to adopt enabling legislations to facilitate the arrests and prosecution of piracy suspects.

Once believed to be a thing of the past, piracy has been propelled to the forefront of international law due to the recent upsurge in piracy attacks off of the Somali coast. International legal norms prohibit acts of piracy to the extent that such prohibition has crystallized into a preempts norm or jus cogens (a fundamental principle of international law that must not be breached). But preempts norms bind states and state actors only rather than individuals, which apparently is of little import in Somalia because it lacks a functioning government, and is widely viewed as a failed state that does not have any effective control over the individuals perpetrating piracy along its coast. Notwithstanding, the IMO issued several advisory circulars governing piracy in Somalia beginning in April 2009.

IV. CENTRAL AFRICA

A. DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC OF CONGO

In January, the Congolese Tutsi rebel leader, Laurent Nkunda, was arrested in Rwandan territory thanks to a joint Congolese-Rwandan offensive. In May 2008, the ICC had issued an arrest warrant for Nkunda's military chief, Bosco Ntaganda, who is now on trial for war crimes and crimes against humanity in The Hague. Formerly known as Zaire, the Democratic Republic of Congo plunged into civil war after the death of its longtime dictator, Mobutu Sesesko. Eastern Congo has been the hardest-hit region, as various rebel factions battle each other and government forces for control of the mineral-rich nation. Hundreds of thousands of civilians have been killed, and mass rapes and displacement of an untold number of Congolese citizens have occurred. In response, the ICC has issued several arrest warrants for those deemed to be most responsible for war crimes and crimes against humanity in the Congo, including Congo’s former Vice-President, Jean-Pierre Bemba.

A. Zambia

In November, a Zambian court acquitted a journalist of criminal pornography charges. In July, the President ordered the arrest of Chansa Kabwela after she distributed images to several prominent Zambians, including the Vice President, of a Zambian woman giving birth in public. Zambian law makes it an offense to publish or distribute pornographic materials. Kabwela argued that she was only trying to convince the government to resolve the strike by health workers that had effectively shut down public health services in the country. The magistrate judge apparently agreed with her, stating that the government failed to prove its case against Kabwela.

B. Angola

1. Customs

In 2008, the Angolan customs authorities commenced a drive to modernize their infrastructure and legal framework in order to facilitate importation and exportation in Angola. Within the scope of this modernization attempt, the following statutes were approved by Joint Executive Decree No. 323/08, of December 16, 2008 (new regulations on Angolan Port Tariffs). This statute was subsequently amended in March 2009 by Executive Decree No. 19/09, of March 12, 2009.

The Council of Ministers also ordered the gazetting of a rectification to the current Customs Tariff Schedule.

2. Energy

Another sector of the economy that was the subject of important developments in late 2008 and 2009 was the energy sector, with special focus on the oil & gas sector.

Important changes were introduced with respect to training and recruitment of Angolan personnel for the oil sector by means of Decree 116/08 of October 14, 2008. The new Training Decree revokes the previous legislation in force, and applies to companies in the upstream, downstream, and services sectors.

85. Executive Decree No. 19/09 (2009) (Angl.).

In June 2009, the Training Decree was revoked by Decree-Law No. 17/09 of June 26, 2009.89 Although this new statute essentially mirrors the 2008 Decree, it was reissued pursuant to a National Assembly Resolution No. 21/09 of March 16, 2009,90 as some of the rules required prior authorization from the National Assembly.

The Ministry of Petroleum also led a major drive to update the regulations applicable to various gas-related activities through the approval of regulations on: (i) installation, operation, repair, and changes to liquefied petroleum gas (LPG) storage facilities;91 (ii) the principles governing the construction of the gas infra-structure system, comprising pipelines, distribution networks, compressor stations and regulator stations;92 and (iii) the general framework for fuel gas activities.93

In preparation for the re-launching of the suspended licensing round for granting of new oil and gas concessions, the Government enacted two important statutes. The first set forth the rules for access to onshore areas and acquisition of land rights necessary for the execution of petroleum operations.94 The second enacted the Regulations on Petroleum Operations.95

3. Banking and Securities

The banking sector in Angola was also subject to important changes during the last year. Through Executive Decree No. 12/09, of February 26, 2009, the Ministry of Finance authorized the issuance of Treasury Bonds in the amount of up to US$520 million, during 2009.96 The terms for the issuance, sale, and redemption of the bonds are contained in Order No. 66/09 of February 26, 2009.97 The Ministry of Finance Order No. 73/09 of April 9, 2009 set forth the characteristics, amount, and conditions for remuneration and redemption of Treasury bonds issued in 2009.98

To fight the negative impact of the international financial crisis, certain measures were introduced by the government that caused serious practical implications on the day-to-day activities of local and foreign companies.

By means of Instruction No. 5/09, of April 17, 2009, the Central Bank of Angola (BNA) significantly reduced the limit on foreign exchange operations involving commercial current invisibles needing prior approval from the BNA.99 BNA's prior approval is now required for all payments in excess of US$100,000 (single payments or multiple payments over a twelve-month period) made by Angolan residents to non-residents. The previous limit was US$500,000.100

Simultaneously, the BNA took measures aimed at preserving the country's hard currency reserves, notably by raising the mandatory legal reserve for banks from twenty to thirty percent. This new instruction was revoked by Instruction No. 8/09 of May 21, 2009, which did not change the established percentage of the reserves.

Finally, BNA amended the terms and conditions under which resident and non-resident foreign exchange entities may hold and manage foreign and national currency accounts.

4. Tax

The Ministry of Finance approved the amount of the fees due for the authorization, registry, and inspection of public companies and other players in the financial market. These measures are aimed at ensuring the correct management and supervision of the Angolan Stock Exchange, which is scheduled to commence operating in 2010.

By way of Executive Decree No. 15/09 of 3 March 2009, the Ministry of Finance also updated the minimum profit table used in the Industrial Tax Code.

5. Transportation

The transportation sector was also subject to two important changes. First, the new Road Code was approved by Decree-Law 5/08 of September 29, 2008. This Decree-Law revoked all previous laws on the matter, including the former Road Code of 1954. Second, the Ministry of Transport rectified Executive Decree No. 26/08 of March 3, 2008 on March 18, 2009. Various Aeronautical Technical Rules approved by Executive Decree No. 26/08, which were not published together with the statute, were gazetted through the rectification.

C. Mozambique

1. Banking

The Bank of Mozambique (BoM) approved the Customer Service Regulations of Credit Institutions and Financial Companies. BoM also approved new regulations on the Calculation and Creation of Mandatory Reserves, thus revoking an earlier BoM Notice. It also approved new regulations for the Market Operations System (MOS) and the new Interbank Monetary Market Regulations, revoking an earlier notice from 2005.

2. Capital Markets

Through Law No. 10/2008 of November 25, 2008, the Parliament authorized the Government to proceed with the enactment of the Securities Code, which will replace Decree No. 48/98 of September 22, 1998. Though not yet published, a Securities Market Code was enacted.

3. Civil Procedure

Through Law No. 9/2008 of November 25, 2008, the Parliament authorized the Government to modify the Civil Procedure Code (CPP) so as to adjust it to the new Judicial Organization, the Organizational Law of the Public Prosecution Department and Statute of the Public Prosecution Department’s Magistrates and the Law on the Insolvency and Recovery of Businesses. The CPP was effectively amended by means of Decree-Law No. 1/2009 of April 24, 2009.
