In the Spring of 1956, the Chairman of President Eisenhower's "People-to-People Program" for law requested that the Association of American Law Schools undertake a plan to advance understanding among the people of the world. One of the suggestions of the Association was the publication of reciprocal collaborative notes on a legal problem which would be written, under supervision of their professors, by law students in the United States and their counterparts in some other country.

Professor Alan M. Sinclair of Southern Methodist University School of Law and Dean William F. Ryan of the Faculty of Law of the University of New Brunswick, Saint John, N. B., Canada, have collaborated on such a project; their students, Gordon Jackson and Robert Keegan of Southern Methodist University, and Robert Webster, of the University of New Brunswick, have prepared case notes on a hypothetical fact situation. The American and Canadian notes, followed by a short comment, appear in the Case Notes section of this issue.
