

Sexual Orientation and Gender Identity

MARK E. WOJCIK*

This article surveys international developments affecting legal issues in sexual orientation and gender identity during 2015.¹ Among other developments, same-sex marriage became legal in the United States (by a landmark U.S. Supreme Court decision) and in Ireland (by an overwhelming voter referendum), bringing the number of nations recognizing same-sex marriage to eighteen (or twenty-one, depending on how England, Wales, and Scotland are counted).

I. Equality and Non-Discrimination

A. NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONS

As of the end of 2015, sexual orientation was expressly protected under the national constitutions of Bolivia,² Ecuador,³ Fiji,⁴ Kosovo,⁵ Malta,⁶ Mexico,⁷ Portugal,⁸ South Africa,⁹ and Sweden.¹⁰ Sexual orientation is also protected under the Human Rights Act of New Zealand,¹¹ the Northern Ireland Act of 1988, as amended,¹² and the Scotland Act

The Supreme Court of India, in National Legal Services Authority v. Union of India,¹⁸ upheld the right of transgender persons “to decide their self-identified gender” and ordered the national and state governments to “grant legal recognition of their gender identity such as male, female or as [a] third gender.”¹⁹ Bangladesh and Nepal also recognize a legal “third gender” category.²⁰

B. SAME-SEX MARRIAGE

The number of countries recognizing same-sex marriage continues to increase. As of the end of 2015, same-sex marriage is legal in eighteen countries: Argentina; Belgium; Brazil; Canada; Denmark (including its former province, Greenland, which is now an autonomous Danish dependent territory); France; Iceland; Ireland; Luxembourg; the Netherlands; New Zealand; Norway; Portugal; South Africa; Spain; Sweden; the United States; and Uruguay.²¹ Same-sex marriage also became legal in England, Wales, and Scotland in 2014, bringing to twenty-one the number of nations that recognize same-sex marriage at the end of 2015.²²

In 2015, same-sex marriage became legal in three countries: Luxembourg, all of the United States, and Ireland. Same-sex marriage became legal in Luxembourg on January

1, 2015, when legislation enacted in 2014 entered into effect.²³ The openly gay prime minister of Luxembourg married his same-sex partner in May 2015.²⁴

Same-sex marriage became legal for the entire United States on June 26, 2015, when the U.S. Supreme Court ruled in Obergefell v. Hodges that “the right to marry is a fundamental right inherent in the liberty of the person, and under the Due Process and Equal Protection Clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment [to the U.S. Constitution,] couples of the same-sex may not be deprived of that right and that liberty.”²⁵ The Supreme Court held in Obergefell that “same-sex couples may exercise the fundamental right to marry,”²⁶ and that “there is no lawful basis for a State [of the United States] to refuse to recognize a lawful same-sex marriage performed in another State [or foreign country] on the ground of its same-sex character.”²⁷ Prior to the decision in Obergefell, same-sex marriage was recognized in thirty-eight states and the District of Columbia.

Same-sex marriage became legal in Ireland on November 16, 2015, after Ireland became the first nation in the world to legalize same-sex marriage by a popular vote in May 2015.²⁸

Finland will recognize same-sex marriage as of March 1, 2017.²⁹

Slovenia had passed a law to recognize same-sex marriage, but voters there repealed the same-sex marriage law before it could enter into effect.³⁰

Mexico recognized same-sex marriages in only some of its states at the end of 2015, but the Mexican Supreme Court requires all Mexican states to recognize lawful same-sex marriages performed in other states, and individual Mexican states increasingly recognize same-sex marriage.³¹

Tajikistan,⁵⁰ Uganda,⁵¹ Ukraine,⁵² and Vietnam.⁵³ The constitutions of Peru⁵⁴ and Venezuela⁵⁵ also provide for common law marriage only between a man and a woman.

Yet, the march of same-sex marriage continues around the world. For example, a lawsuit was filed in the People's Republic of China in 2015 to recognize same-sex marriage.⁵⁶

C. CIVIL UNIONS, DOMESTIC PARTNERSHIPS, AND OTHER FORMS OF LEGAL RECOGNITION OF SAME-SEX RELATIONSHIPS FALLING SHORT OF MARRIAGE

Other jurisdictions that do not yet recognize same-sex marriage may nonetheless provide for civil unions or similar relationships such as registered partnerships, domestic partnerships, reciprocal beneficiary relationships, civil solidarity pacts, and similar relationships. Chile⁵⁷ and Greece,⁵⁸ for example, each adopted civil union and civil partnership laws in 2015.

Some of these legal civil union creations falling short of marriage may be open to both same-sex and opposite-sex couples,⁵⁹ although some jurisdictions (such as the United Kingdom) limit civil unions to same-sex couples.

Unless civil union or similar statutes are repealed, jurisdictions that recently recognized same-sex marriage may now effectively offer same-sex couples the choice of entering into a civil union or lawful marriage. These jurisdictions may also offer same-sex couples in a civil union the option of converting that civil union to a marriage.⁶⁰ As of April 2015, 34 states offered same-sex couples either marriage or civil unions.⁶¹

The lack of legal recognition for same-sex couples can result in mistreatment by state actors, private actors (including healthcare providers), and insurance companies.⁶² Countries that do not protect same-sex couples may see political and legal challenges to provide legal recognition of relationships. Some of these challenges, at least in Europe, may be based on a July 2015 decision of the European Court of Human Rights (ECHR).⁶³ In July 2015, the ECHR ruled in favor of three same-sex couples in Oliari and Others v. Italy.⁶⁴ The couples had been denied the right to marry in Italy or to enter into any type of civil union or domestic partnership.⁶⁵ The ECHR found that without same-sex marriage or any form of legal recognition for same-sex couples, the Italian Government failed to fulfill its “positive obligation to ensure” that same-sex couples in Italy “have available a specific legal framework providing for the recognition and protection of their same-sex unions.”⁶⁶ The ECHR held that Italy’s failure to protect same-sex couples violated Article 8 of the European Convention on Human Rights.⁶⁷ Italy is divided as to how it will comply with the court’s ruling.⁶⁸

D. SODOMY LAWS

States that criminalize sexual acts between consenting adults violate international human rights law because “these laws, by their mere existence, violate the rights to privacy and non-discrimination.”⁶⁹ The Global Commission on HIV and the Law also determined that sodomy laws facilitate the spread of HIV/AIDS.⁷⁰ In Caribbean countries with sodomy laws, almost one in four men who have sex with men is HIV-positive; in Caribbean countries without sodomy laws, the rate is one in fifteen men.⁷¹ Although the U.N. Human Rights Committee and other human rights mechanisms have urged states to repeal sodomy laws since the Committee’s 1994 landmark decision in Toonen v. Australia, at least seventy-six states still have laws that criminalize and harass people on the basis of their sexual orientation and gender expression.⁷²

SEXUAL ORIENTATION & GENDER IDENTITY 523

Same-sex sexual relationships between consenting adults have been legal throughout the United States since the Supreme Court's 2003 ruling in Lawrence v. Texas.⁷³ Nonetheless, two men in the state of Louisiana were arrested in 2015 for violating the state sodomy law that was still on the books despite the Supreme Court's ruling in Lawrence.⁷⁴ Until these unconstitutional sodomy laws are removed from the statute books, police may continue to harass and threaten to arrest consenting adults for their private sexual conduct. And in another development of 2015, a California judge threw out as patently unconstitutional a proposed state ballot initiative that would have imposed the death penalty for sodomy in California.⁷⁵

Three countries have recently abolished their sodomy laws. São Tomé and Príncipe abolished its sodomy law in 2012, and the Republic of Palau abolished its sodomy laws in 2014.⁷⁶ Palau, for its part, had accepted the recommendation made in 2011 by the U.N. Human Rights Council to repeal laws that criminalized consensual sexual activity between adults of the same sex.⁷⁷ And Mozambique abolished its sodomy law effective in 2015 as part of an overall reform of its colonial criminal code.⁷⁸

The United Kingdom and several Australian states adopted measures to expunge criminal records of convictions for sodomy and other offenses related to consensual homosexuality.⁷⁹

Some other countries have kept, reinstated, or enacted new sodomy laws. The India Supreme Court reinstated that country's sodomy law in 2013, reversing lower court rulings that found the law unconstitutional.⁸⁰ In 2014, The Gambia enacted a criminal code to provide life sentences for homosexual activity.⁸¹ In that same year, Brunei enacted a new criminal code that provided for death by stoning for acts of sodomy.⁸² Other countries that can punish consensual acts of homosexuality with the death penalty include

E. ANTI-GAY-PROPAGANDA LAWS

Some countries have recently proposed or enacted “anti-gay-propaganda laws” that purport to protect minors from public discussion or information on “non-traditional sexual relations.”⁸⁴ These countries include Kyrgyzstan, Nigeria, the Republic of Moldova, the Russian Federation, Uganda, and Ukraine.⁸⁵ As the U.N. High Commissioner for Human Rights observed, these anti-gay-propaganda laws “are often vaguely worded and arbitrarily restrict the rights to freedom of expression and assembly.”⁸⁶ These laws “also contribute to ongoing persecution of members of the LGBT community, including young persons who identify or are perceived as LGBT.”⁸⁷ Individuals in those countries that have enacted these laws face arrest as well as acts of violence and discrimination.⁸⁸

F. CONVERSION THERAPY

Efforts to change an individual’s sexual orientation “are now widely regarded by mainstream mental health practitioners as unscientific, ineffective, and mentally and emotionally harmful.”⁸⁹ There is increasing recognition that involuntary conversion therapy may also be a form of torture. In 2014, three members of the U.N. Committee Against Torture questioned the United States as to whether the practice of conversion therapy violates the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.⁹⁰ And in 2015, the report of the U.N. High Commissioner for Human Rights stated that conversion therapy had “been found to be unethical, unscientific and ineffective and, in some instances, tantamount to torture.”⁹¹

Some jurisdictions have begun to enact laws to ban conversion therapy against minors. In the United States, conversion therapy bans have been enacted in Illinois,⁹² New Jersey,⁹³ Oregon,⁹⁴ and Washington, D.C.⁹⁵ In 2015, the U.S. Supreme Court declined to hear a case in which counselors argued the conversion therapy ban enacted in New Jersey had denied them their right of free speech under the First Amendment.⁹⁶ Other jurisdictions are expected to enact conversion therapy bans.

In the United Kingdom conversion therapy is not yet illegal, but in January 2015, fourteen health organizations signed a statement that conversion therapy was “potentially harmful and unethical.”⁹⁷

G. GENDER IDENTITY AND EXPRESSION

In the United States, the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission and federal courts now characterize discrimination against transgender persons as sex-based discrimination in violation of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act.⁹⁸

As previously noted, Bangladesh, India, and Nepal give legal recognition to a “third gender”. And new passport policies in Australia and New Zealand allow individuals to choose male, female, or indeterminate gender markers.⁹⁹

Colombia abandoned the requirement for transgender persons to have gender reassignment surgery before the government will recognize their transition.¹⁰⁰

Despite advances in some countries, transgender persons usually cannot obtain legal recognition of their preferred gender, including changes in the name and gender on state-issued identity documents.¹⁰¹ They consequently face difficulties and discrimination in housing, employment, financial credit, international travel, and other matters.¹⁰²

Discrimination against transgender persons often arises in connection with much more basic human needs, such as using a bathroom.¹⁰³

In a positive development for transgender Muslims, the first madrassa for transgender Muslims opened in Indonesia.¹⁰⁴ But this year in Malaysia, a Sharia court convicted nine transgender women under a law that prohibits “a male person posing as a woman.”¹⁰⁵

H. SAME-SEX SEXUAL HARASSMENT

Some jurisdictions recognize same-sex sexual harassment. In the United States, one case in 2015 brought an award of compensatory and punitive damages in the amount of $2.4 million dollars.¹⁰⁶

I. RELIGIOUS FREEDOM

As same-sex marriage progressed, some claimed religious objections against any act that would facilitate a same-sex marriage. An elected court clerk in Kentucky, Kim Davis, was jailed after refusing to issue marriage licenses to same-sex couples despite federal court orders to do so.¹⁰⁷

In response to the growing acceptance of same-sex marriage and non-discrimination laws that prohibit acts of discrimination against lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender persons, some jurisdictions introduced legislation styled as “Religious Freedom Restoration Acts.” These legislative efforts were often deemed “flawed” attempts to reverse previous protections against discrimination based on sexual orientation or gender identity, or attempts to allow public servants and private citizens to discriminate based on sexual orientation or gender identity.¹⁰⁸

J. INTERSEX

Australia and Malta are the first countries to prohibit discrimination against intersex persons.¹⁰⁹ In 2013, Australia became the world’s first jurisdiction to prohibit discrimination based on “intersex status.” Subsection 4(1) of Australia’s Sexual Orientation, Gender Identity, and Intersex Status Act of 2013 defined “intersex status” as “having physical, hormonal or genetic features that are: (a) neither wholly female nor wholly male; or (b) a combination of female and male; or (c) neither female nor male.”¹¹⁰

In 2015, Malta became the first state to prohibit sex-assignment surgery or treatment of intersex minors without their informed consent.¹¹¹

K. BLOOD DONATIONS

In the United States, the Food and Drug Administration ended a lifetime ban on blood donations by gay men.¹¹² Under the previous rule, any man who had sex with another man was barred for life from donating blood. The new rule removes that lifetime ban, but keeps it in place for any man who has had sex with another man in the past year. The new rule ignores modern advances in technology to test for HIV and also ignores situations such as monogamous same-sex couples that are HIV-negative and would pose no risk of transmitting HIV. The rule with its one-year prohibition perpetuates “the stereotype that all gay and bisexual men are inherently dangerous.”¹¹³

II. Violence

A. ACTS OF VIOLENCE

“[U.N.] human rights mechanisms continue to receive reports of homophobic and transphobic violence committed in all regions.”¹¹⁴ Acts of violence are both physical (including murders, beatings, kidnappings, and sexual assaults) and psychological (including threats, arbitrary deprivations of liberty, and forced psychiatric incarceration).¹¹⁵ The U.N. High Commissioner for Human Rights recognizes these attacks as “a form of gender-based violence, driven by a desire to punish individuals whose appearance or behaviour appears to challenge gender stereotypes.”¹¹⁶ Violence motivated by homophobia and transphobia is “in some instances characterized by levels of cruelty exceeding that of other hate crimes.”¹¹⁷

The terrorist organization, the Islamic State of Iraq and Syria (ISIS), has executed at least thirty-six men accused of having homosexual relations.¹¹⁸ The men, who are sometimes as young as fifteen years old, are pushed to their deaths from tall buildings.¹¹⁹

Murders of gay men, lesbians, and transgender persons were also reported around the world, including countries such as Brazil,¹²⁰ Chile,¹²¹ Jamaica,¹²² the Islamic Republic of Iran,¹²³ Uruguay,¹²⁴ South Africa,¹²⁵ and the United States.¹²⁶

Other acts of violence include kidnappings of gay men who are beaten and humiliated, sometimes with video being posted on social media, and rapes of lesbian women.¹²⁷ Men assumed to be gay in the Syrian Arab Republic have reportedly been raped and tortured by government security agents and non-State armed groups.¹²⁸ Police in Zimbabwe reportedly arrested and beat forty-four members of an LGBT organization.¹²⁹ Other arrests of LGBT persons were reported in countries such as Bangladesh and Egypt. Human rights defenders, in various countries, trying to protect LGBT persons also were subjected to violence and threats.¹³⁰

In the United States, sixteen gay or transgender individuals were allegedly subject to solitary confinement, torture, and ill-treatment including sexual assault while in immigration detention.¹³¹ And, in Guatemala, a transgender woman in detention was allegedly raped more than eighty times.¹³²

B. HATE CRIME LAWS

As stated in a 2015 report of the U.N. High Commissioner for Human Rights, many countries have recently enacted or strengthened anti-hate crime laws. These countries include Albania, Chile, Finland, Georgia, Greece, Honduras, Malta, Montenegro, Portugal, and Serbia.¹³³ Additionally, Brazil, Honduras, Mexico, and Spain established special hate crime prosecution units, and other measures to improve prosecutions of hate crimes were reported in countries including Belgium, Canada, Colombia, Denmark, France, Montenegro, the Philippines, South Africa, Spain, and the United Kingdom.¹³⁴

III. Other International Developments

A. U.S. DIPLOMATIC REPRESENTATION

At one time, being gay would be grounds for dismissal from the U.S. Foreign Service. Now the United States has six openly gay ambassadors, and U.S. embassies around the world have hosted gay pride events, sometimes marking the first LGBT pride events to be held in those countries.¹³⁵

France has sent an openly gay ambassador to the United States.¹³⁶

B. UNITED NATIONS

In May 2015, the U.N. High Commissioner for Human Rights submitted a report requested by the U.N. Human Rights Council to update a 2011 report on violence and discrimination against individuals based on their sexual orientation and gender identity.¹³⁷ In addition to documenting homophobic and transphobic violence and discrimination, the report makes a number of specific recommendations for individual nations, for national human rights institutions, and for the Human Rights Council.¹³⁸ Among other points, the report emphasized that states “have well-established obligations to respect, protect and fulfill the human rights of all persons within their jurisdiction, including LGBT and intersex persons.”¹³⁹

The United Nations also continued its “Free and Equal” global education campaign to combat homophobia and transphobia.¹⁴⁰ The campaign has reached more than one billion people by 2015.¹⁴¹

C. AFRICAN COMMISSION ON HUMAN AND PEOPLE’S RIGHTS

The African Commission on Human and People’s Rights, in 2014, adopted a resolution that condemned violence and other human rights violations based on actual or imputed sexual orientation and gender identity.¹⁴² The resolution strongly urged African States to end all acts of violence and abuse, whether committed by State or non-state actors, including by enacting and effectively applying appropriate laws prohibiting and punishing all forms of violence including those targeting persons on the basis of their
